U. S. Plans Trust Drive To Speed Up Housing

Suits Projected Against Price-Fixing, Other Deterrents To Building Wave

The Justice Department hopes to smash in one onslaught of antitrust suits numerous deterrents to needed construction of low and moderate cost houses throughout the country, it was learned yesterday.

A concerted drive is planned against all forms of trade restraints, including those in which organized labor may be involved, with a view to increasing competition in the construction and related industries and giving business recovery its biggest possible boost.

Attorney General Murphy told a press conference that the department's investigation of practices in these industries was still in the initial stages, and that it would take some time to work out a program of antitrust cases.

Attack on Price-Fixing

The biggest feature of the drive probably will be an attack on price-fixing in building materials. Prices of some building materials, it was said, are substantially higher than they were in 1929.

Cases where prices of materials have been pushed up with no apparent economic justification, or where advances occur or appear in prospect under present conditions, will come under the close scrutiny of the department, it was disclosed.

Meanwhile, the Senate Banking Committee, in approving an increase of $1,000,000,000 in the amount of insured mortgages which the Federal Housing Administration may have outstanding, voted to require payment of "prevailing wage scales" on all FHA-insured multi-family and apartment houses costing over $20,000. It also agreed to a limit on FHA insurance of mortgages on homes already built amounting to 25 per cent of total mortgages insured.

Announcement Soon

Investigation of the construction field is a major phase of department plans for giving the antitrust laws a trial—something, it is asserted, that has never been done. Murphy declared the department would announce shortly one or two other important antitrust cases.

He intends, however, to issue first a statement of policy with respect to such suits.

Murphy emphasized that the antitrust laws would be "vigorously and effectively" but discriminatingly and "not irresponsibly" enforced.

"We intend to do an effective job," he declared, "but we are not going to harass business or cause needless friction."

Chance to Clean House

In all cases, he pointed out, the test will be whether it is in the public interest to act.

Every opportunity will be held out to industry, however, to clean house. This may mean that consent decrees will be entered into in many cases.

The department inclines to the belief that, in order to remove the "bottleneck" in housing construction it will be necessary to attack the hindrances that have grown up in this industry on all fronts at one time.

No conclusion has been reached, it is said, as to what industries or situations the drive will be directed against. This will depend on three main things—the price behavior of particular materials or construction processes, the importance of the material or process in housing construction, and whether or not the evidence is such as to indicate success in a legal action.

But in any event, the department plans to strike at one time in a vast number of suits throughout the country. Naturally, it will proceed against Nation-wide situations, and

Suicide Corner No. 3

14th and Avenue No Place for a Softie

Crossing From Southeast Corner Is Good for That Tired Feeling—If Streetcars Turning Despite Signs, Lights Don't End All Feeling

The intersection of downtown Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue—conceded the city's busiest traffic spot—is no place for a softie. Strong men have been known to wilt after one death-defying trek from curb to curb.

Most any hour of the day, but particularly during rush periods, the corner is a maelstrom of swirling, honking vehicles—to say nothing of lumbering, bell-clanging trolley cars. Suicide is a matter of moments for the pedestrian who fails to keep constantly on the alert.

To buck turning autos and taxicabs on every turn is tough enough, but to come unexpectedly face to face with streetcars turning at all angles is enough to disrupt the strongest nervous system.

It is all the more bewildering because these streetcars pass through the intersection in open violation of all signs, signals and safety rules, catching the poor pedestrian unawares.

In the center of the street is a standard on which are the words,

Only 4 Democrats Break Party Line-Up On Dollar Valuation

By Robert C. Albright.

Overriding Republican efforts to stabilize the price of gold at present levels, the House yesterday without a record vote extended the President's power to revalue the gold content of the dollar and continued the Treasury's $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund.

A minority motion to strike out White House authority to devalue the dollar further was defeated 225 to 118 on party lines, with only four Democrats voting for it.

Both the power to revalue the dollar and the life of the stabilization fund were extended to June 30, 1941, six months beyond this Administration's term of office. Power to buy newly mined domestic silver above world prices likewise was continued.

Townsend Derides Effort

Only one limiting amendment was approved, and this was on committee recommendation. It provided that an annual Treasury report on the stabilization fund must be submitted to Congress as well as the President.

The bill now goes to the Senate, where a Senate Banking and Currency sub-committee still is considering a companion measure. Here an attempt is expected to re-

Truck Kills Aged Woman; Autos Hurt 6

Death Driver Held; 2 Virginia Accident Victims Succumb

An aged woman, identified through laundry marks as Mrs. Cora Bell Coffman, 75, of 1321 M street northwest, was killed, another woman died of injuries suffered last Saturday and three children and a youth were injured yesterday in District traffic.

A Washington colored woman was hurt fatally and her woman companion less seriously injured when they were struck near Memorial Circle at Alexandria, Va., by an automobile driven, according to park police, by Miss Ruth Sherier, of Alexandria.

Crushed by a loaded coal truck at Fourteenth street and Constitution avenue northwest, Mrs. Coffman 73, died at Emergency Hospital

She was crossing Fourteenth street when she was struck by the northbound truck. Witnesses said she was crossing against the light and was knocked about 15 feet.

Police took into custody William Bates, colored, 38, of Alexandria, Va., driver of the truck, and said he will appear at a coroner's inquest.

Her death brought the District traffic toll to 30, two above the number at this time in 1938.

The second victim was Miss Mary E. Boyd, 67, of 1539 I street northwest. She died of injuries suffered last Saturday at Washington, Va.

Mrs. Boyd retired from the Department of Justice last year. She was riding with friends when the accident occurred.

Pearl Hyson, 45, colored, of 303 M street southwest, suffered a fractured leg, fractured jaw and injuries when she was struck near Alexandria. She died in Alexandria Hospital. Her companion, Helen Colbert, colored, of 1203 Third street, was injured slightly.

According to park police, the Hyson woman suffered from cataracts on both eyes and her companion was

Three Franklin D. Roosevelts In Reunion at Charlottesville

Charlottesville, Va., April 21 (AP) — Three generations of Franklin D. Roosevelts gathered in a white brick home just off the University of Virginia campus tonight for an old-fashioned reunion.

The President of the United States, enjoying a respite from duties, motored 123 miles from Washington this afternoon to spend t night and part of tomorrow with his third son, 24-year-old Franklin, jr., the latter's wife, the former Ethel DuPont, and their 9-month-old baby, Franklin, 3d.

So anxious was the Chief Executive to assume the role of private citizen for a couple of days that he dispensed with the usual police escort on the three-hour drive.

In a half hour visit to Monticello, home of Thomas Jefferson, the President chatted with Thomas L. Rhodes, custodian of the estate for 53 years, who said afterward the President told him he was going to propose legislation to have Jefferson's books, now in the Congressional Library at Washington, returned to Monticello. He said the President remarked it would be a tragedy not to have the whole collection here.

At Franklin's home, the Roosevelts had tea with Dr. John Lloyd Newcomb, president of the university, and Mrs. Newcomb; Armistead M. Dobie, dean of the university law school, and other faculty members and their wives.

The President was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Littleton Hambley, of Virginia, distant relatives; their young daughter, and Mrs. Margaret L. Suckley, of New York City, Mrs. Hambley's sister.

'Isms' Denounced

By Christine Sadler

After condemning Nazi-Fascism as an alien philosophy which strives for domination in the United States through "deceptive claims of Americanism," Daughters of the American Revolution yesterday added it to the "isms" against which their society is pledged to fight.

In resolutions adopted at the final business meeting of their forty-eighth Continental Congress they asked that the immigration act be amended to put Nazi-Fascism with their long-time enemy—Communism—on the list of doctrines which should not be permitted to enter this country.

The Daughters charged that it created racial divisions and promoted the development of "pressure fronts."

Thank Mrs. Roosevelt

At the same meeting they agreed to thank Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt for arranging a White House reception in their honor yesterday.

Before this could be voted, one delegate inquired: "Did she arrange it? Did she have anything to do with it?"

"I should say she did have," replied Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., the president general. "A number of letters passed between the president general and Mrs. Roosevelt. I think the word 'arranged' is well chosen."

This was the only incident of the five-day congress that could be attributed to Mrs. Roosevelt's recent resignation from the society because of the Marian Anderson controversy. No negative vote was taken.

A total of 1,723 D. A. R. members attended the White House reception, an annual event that last year attracted 2,057 delegates. In the absence of Mrs. Roosevelt from Washington, this year's guests were received by Mrs. Cordell Hull, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace and Secretary of Labor Perkins.

Congress Officially Closed

The forty-eighth congress closed officially last night with a banquet at the Mayflower Hotel, although many of the 4,500 women in attendance will remain in town for the forty-fourth convention of Children of the Revolution which will continue through Monday. Others went to Valley Forge to dedicate State bells in the D. A. R. carillon there.

Commander Leland P. Lovette, of the U. S. Navy, declared when addressing the women in Constitution Hall yesterday that the American Army and Navy are "hoping for the best but keeping our powder dry."

Hazen Approves His Action, Lauds Self on His Stand

Commissioner Hazen yesterday went on record against certain parts of the Griffenhagen report.

For the record, the commissioner wrote two letters—both to himself, in two capacities.

As chairman of the District Unemployment Compensation Board, he introduced a resolution at a recent D. U. C. meeting opposing the report. His next move was to send the resolution to himself as president of the Board of Commissioners.

When he received his letter, he approved his action as D. U. C. chairman, and wrote his second letter, commending his stand. This letter he sent to Melvin C. Hazen, chairman of the D. U. C., from the chairman of the Board of Commissioners.

No matter how one looks at the report, Commissioner Hazen is against it.

Warm Week-End Predicted for D. C.

A week-end of clear skies and mild temperatures awaits residents of Washington, the weather bureau predicted last night.

Navy Board Asks Fleet Be Doubled

House Committee Calls for Reserve Of Six Thousand Naval Aviators

Defense Situation

TWO CONGRESSIONAL committees yesterday heard a Senator and an economist declare this country had already decided which side it favored in war. Story on page 2.

Plans for Navy

By J. Gilbert Norris.

Maintenance of an active fleet double the size of the present one is visualized in a report submitted to Congress by a special Navy board.

Reporting to the House Naval Affairs Committee on the adequacy of West Coast base facilities, the board of ranking naval officers expresses the "probability" that "overage" ships for which replacements are now building will be kept in active service with the fleet after the latter are completed.

The group also predicts that many of the decommissioned destroyers which have been tied up in yards for many years will be manned and added to the active fleet. While past policy had been to keep this laid up fleet for use only in wartime, the report declares they may be put in service "at times other than at the beginning of a national emergency."

Replacements Planned

All the Navy's battleships will be 26 years old by 1946, and replacements" have been laid down or projected for eight of them. It is planned to "replace" the others as soon as possible. With the completion of the program the United States would have 18 new and 15 old battleships, more than twice as many as now.

While the older ships are no match for the latest types, most of them have been modernized and can render valuable service for a number of years, officials feel. What makes their presence more valuable is that while other nations undoubtedly will follow suit and keep their over-age ships in service, Great Britain and the United States will have much larger "secondary fleets" than the totalitarians. Both Germany and Italy have but few vessels in this category.

Meanwhile, the House Naval Affairs Committee called for a reserve of 6,000 naval aviators, four times as many as at present. Reporting a bill to give reserve fliers the rank of ensign upon graduation from the Pensacola flying school instead of the rank of aviation cadet, the committee amended it to provide for a minimum of 6,000 reserve pilots.

Seven-Year Duty

The bill would keep the reservists on duty with the fleet for seven instead of four years as at present and provide for their advancement to junior lieutenant.

Committee members said the measure is designed to enable the Navy to compete with the Army in securing the pick of material for its flying school.

At the same time, the Senate

Mother of Dying Baby Asks Help of Mrs. Roosevelt

New York, April 21 (INS).—Convinced her baby's condition would again be pronounced hopeless by specialists who held another consultation today, Mrs. Rose Miller, of Brooklyn, tonight appealed to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt to "please help us."

In a "mother to mother" telegram to the wife of the President she said:

"Doctors do not give my baby much longer to live. You're a mother and understand. Won't you please help us."

Mrs. Miller, wife of an unemployed clothing cutter, gave birth to her daughter nine months ago. Although seemingly normal at birth, the child, Carol, recently was found to have been born with broken hips, to be blind, and to be facing death in four to eight weeks.

Prosecutor's Aid Indicted in Bribery

New York, April 21 (AP).—Assistant District Attorney Francis A. Madden, of Brooklyn, was indicted today on six counts charging conspiracy to obstruct justice, bribery and demanding an unlawful fee.

Madden joined District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan's staff January 1, 1936. He was charged with accepting $9,000 in bribes to protect two alleged abortionists.

Holland, Belgium Reported Seeking German Assurance

By International News Service.

London, April 21.—Indications reached London tonight that Belgium and Holland were asking non-aggression assurances from Chancellor Hitler.

British press dispatches said the Belgian Government already had replied to Hitler's questionnaire, which asked several small nations whether they felt themselves threatened by Germany and whether they requested President Roosevelt's intercession in their behalf.

A Brussels message to the Daily Express said it was understood Belgium answered by expressing the hope that Germany would respect the non-aggression guarantee she gave Belgium last year. Dutch circles in London meanwhile indicated that Holland's reply to Hitler would "express the hope that Germany will respect Dutch sovereignty."

If these reports are accurate, they do not mean that Belgium and Holland are asking Hitler for such a formal non-aggression pledge as Roosevelt's message of last Saturday suggested Germany and Italy should exchange with 31 other nations.

But they may indicate that the two countries bordering the English Channel are hinting to the Reichsfuehrer their uneasiness concerning the future and a desire to get some informal sign of Germany's intention not to cross their frontiers.

U. S. Reported "Amazed"

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 21.—The controlled Nazi press, in jubilant mood, told Germans tonight that Reichsfuehrer Hitler's huge fiftieth birthday parade had struck terror into the heart's of Germany's enemies.

Every radio announcement and every edition of the afternoon newspapers reported amazement and awe in the world's capitals at the military might Germany displayed in a four and one-half hour parade yesterday.

It was a "warning to all opponents," said the Koelnische Zeitung.

The Nauchtasgabe of Berlin said the United States was "amazed" at

British Cabinet To Meet Monday On Proposals

By International News Service.

London, April 21.—The British government tonight gave favorable consideration to far-reaching Soviet proposals regarding the project to recreate the pre-war triple entente of England, France and Russia as a foundation for Europe's new security structure.

An extraordinary cabinet meeting was called for Monday to act on Soviet suggestions which include the proposal that immediate general staff consultations be launched to adopt definite plans for coordinated military action in the event aggression strikes at Poland, Rumania, Greece or other countries.

Agreed In Principle

Britain, France and the Soviet Union already have agreed in principle on the formation of the powerful triple entente, which may be announced next week before Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag reply Friday to President Roosevelt's peace message. It was reported Britain and France were considering a Soviet request for aid in the Far East against Japan if Japan attacks Siberia.

At the same time, existence of British commitments to Turkey as well as to Greece and Rumania were indicated by the further assembling of British war vessels at Alexandria and Cyprus.

In Paris it is reported the Russian scheme is of such a comprehensive character that the Soviets have even proposed that Britain and France guarantee to render aid against any

Democracies Won't Fight Till U. S. Joins Them, Editors Told

Two European correspondents, one from Rome and the other from Spain, reported in person to the American Society of Newspaper Editors yesterday and talked without fear of censors.

GERVASI

Frank Gervasi, erstwhile Rome correspondent for International News Service, told the editors not to take the current "stop-Hitler" movement too seriously.

PETERS

"I believe Hitler and Mussolini can take everything in Europe that doesn't belong to Great Britain and France, and there won't be a war," he said.

"Everybody over here wants to know, 'Will there be war?' It takes two to make a fight. The democracies—Great Britain and France—are not strong enough, or at least they think they are not strong enough to meet the dictators on the battlefield. They won't fight until they think America is on their side."

Harold Peters, who covered the war in Spain for the United Press, told the editors that the loyalist side was dominated by Communists with "Moscow-trained men in all key positions."

Paris Decrees $343,000,000 Arms Tax, 45-Hr. Week

Greater French Effort Ordered for 'Test Of Force' With Dictatorships

By the Associated Press.

Paris, April 21.—France threw 13,000,000,000 francs ($343,200,000) into her war machine today with precedent-shattering decree laws which lengthened the work week to 45 hours and levied a new 1 per cent sales tax.

The new laws created an "armament tax" of 1 per cent on all cash transactions, limited profits from industries working for national defense and reduced ordinary government expenditures and established new regulations to increase production in private business.

Finance Minister Paul Reynaud termed the new laws a "test of force between the totalitarian regimes and our government of liberty."

Prefers It to Inflation

Reynaud said the sales tax would be applied to all residents of France alike, and stated he had chosen it rather than inflation to meet the huge costs of armament building.

The new laws are expected to bring in 15,000,000,000 francs ($396,000,000), but 2,000,000,000 francs ($52,800,000) of the amount will pay the national wheat office's 1938 deficit.

The government will tax profits from the armament industry, Reynaud said, by a progressive scale extending from 50 to 100 per cent of the profits over certain levels. These taxes will be in addition to regular income and production taxes.

Calling on French citizens to consent to the new sacrifices, Reynaud said the European armament race had made the huge diversion of funds necessary.

Must and Will Win

"I affirm," he said, "that our country is full of resources and that we must and we are going to win this test of force.

"We must strike out the past with one stroke. We must break off with all that which has been our way of living."

Reynaud had worked on the new measures for five months. They were signed today by President Lebrun at a cabinet meeting in the Elysee Palace after the cabinet had approved them. They were designed to meet two pressing needs:

Additional revenue to pay the cost of mobilizing hundreds of thousands of French reservists now called to the colors and the cost of precautionary measures during the international tension.

New revenue to pay the rising costs of armaments, including new equipment for the army, navy and the air force.

Work Week Lengthened

Reynaud announced the 45-hour work week was being instituted to combat the efforts of a "country next to ours" whose workmen have been placed on a 60-hour schedule. He presumably meant Germany.

The new work week compares with the 40-hour week which was applied generally in France when the Socialist Leon Blum was premier. This work week already had been lengthened, however, in the national defense industries.

Reynaud said frankly that with hundreds of thousands of reservists called to the colors during the recurring crises, those left behind must work harder to supply France with the necessary war materials.

He outlined a gloomy picture of what would happen to the nation if totalitarianism should gain control of it.

"We don't want that to happen," he said, "because in a free democracy such regimentation, such bru-

Roosevelt Hints Merger of Loan Agencies

Rumors Say Jones Would Quit if RFC Went Under Hopkins

President Roosevelt yesterday indicated the need for consolidation of four or five Government lending agencies but denied any decision has been reached on transfer of the RFC and other loan units to the Commerce Department.

He told reporters two reorganization plans may be sent to Congress next week under his new reorganization powers, but declined to disclose the agencies to be affected.

Reports that Chairman Jesse H. Jones' RFC might be placed under the Commerce Department he labeled as guesswork. He likewise declined to confirm Capital rumors that Jones might be made Secretary of Commerce to succeed Harry Hopkins.

As the President warned against newspaper speculation on his reorganization proposals, a fresh crop of reports circulated on Capitol Hill, where friends of the RFC chairman having been buzzing with excitement on the rumored lending agency shift.

These were to the effect that some Congressional leaders already have advised against merging of RFC under the Commerce Department, on the ground that both Houses of Congress would "veto" any effort to place Jones under Hopkins, and that Jones himself has told friends he would resign rather than accept such a post.

That, as an alternative, an independent merger of RFC, the Federal Housing Administration, the Home Owners Loan Corporation and other lending agencies has been suggested, combined into a separate agency, with Jones at the head.

Jones Reported Rejecting Navy

A solution placing Jones at the head of the Commerce Department is favored by the Texan's friends at the Capitol, but the President yesterday discounted this report.

Tentatively, the Capitol reports ran, Jones had been sounded out on taking the Navy Department Cabinet portfolio now held by Secretary Swanson, who is ill. This Jones was said to have rejected, on the ground he didn't know a rowboat from a submarine.

While indicating a desire to place lending agencies under one head, Mr. Roosevelt said there were three or four ways of working out reorganization of such agencies, and failed to say whether these will be dealt with in reorganization plans slated for Congress next week.

He pointed out that it is physically impossible for the President as chief executive to contact the heads of the various lending units when conflicts of opinion arose between them. Such conflicts, he indicated, should be straightened out by coordinated management, as they would be in a private corporation.

Three reorganizations plans recently have been under discussion at the Capital—the lending agency merger, a plan merging Federal public works and relief activities, and a shift said to involve transfer of the Bureau of Fisheries, the Biological Survey and the Coast and Geodetic Survey to the Interior Department.

If a public works merger plan were submitted to Congress it would collide with the pending bill of Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, to co-ordinate Federal works and relief activities in a single agency.

Byrnes is reliably reported to have sought assurances that this consolidation would not be attempted under reorganization powers until his effort at permanent legislation toward the same objective has received Congressional action. The Senate is slated to consider the Byrnes bill Monday.

Franco Is to Free Americans Today

Friends of members of the "Abraham Lincoln" brigade, composed of Americans who fought in the Spanish civil war against Gen. Franco and held prisoner by him, said yesterday they heard from the State Department that arrangements had been made for the Americans release today. The State Department tonight would not confirm these reports.

It was learned in other quarters that efforts to free the Americans had been successful and they are to be released en masse at Hendaye, on the French border.

NLRB Inquiry Sidetracked for Wagner Act Study

The threatened House inquiry into the National Labor Relations Board appeared yesterday to have been shunted off for an indefinite period, pending hearings of the Labor Committee on proposed amendments to the Wagner act.

A resolution of Representative Anderson (Democrat), of Missouri, providing for an investigation of the NLRB, will not be taken up at a meeting of the Rules Committee Monday, Chairman Sabath said.

It was stated at Labor Committee offices that Wagner act hearings probably would not begin for another ten days. Work on amendments to the wage-hours act must be completed first, it was explained.

'We Are Already Signed Up,' Laurence Dennis Asserts; Other Nations Regard America As Unneutral, Veteran Senator Says

By the Associated Press.

Two Congressional committees considering legislation heard almost identical statements, one by Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, and the other by Laurence Dennis, economist and former diplomat, yesterday to the effect that America already had decided where its support would lie in the event of a European war.

"We have practically made up our minds whose side we are on," Borah said. "We have practically named the aggressor nations."

"We are already signed up for war," was Dennis' grim way of putting it.

Borah argued that the temper of the public was such that the present was an unpropitious time for enacting neutrality legislation.

World Already at War

"The world is already at war," he said. "Already things have taken place which make other nations look on us as unneutral. Do you think that we can write permanent legislation at this time?"

The question was addressed to Mrs. Helen Taft Manning, the daughter of President Taft. She, testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, replied that she believed some revision of the present neutrality law should be undertaken.

"There is no neutrality at this time, owing to conditions throughout the world," Borah said. "We have practically named the aggressor nations."

Dennis told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that "we have got to make it a basis of declared American policy that it is none of our business what takes place in Europe and China."

Communists, he said, were anxious to push the United States, Great Britain and France into a war against Germany, Italy and Japan.

"There are only seven great powers," he said, "if Russia could stay on the sidelines while the others fought it out like Kilkenny cats, what could be better for the spread of world communism?"

He advocated retention of the present neutrality act and Mrs. Manning urged that the statute be strengthened.

Half a dozen proposals for changes in the law are pending before the committees, among them a suggestion from Chairman Pittsman tion from Chairman Pittman committee that nations at war be permitted to purchase arms, or any other materials, in this country if they pay cash and haul them away in their own ships.

Considerable support has been evidenced in the committee for a proposal to continue the "cash and carry" provisions of the present law, but make no changes in the statute. The provision in question, which expires automatically May 1, makes it possible for the President to require that when belligerents make purchases here—other than war goods, the sale of which is prohibited—they must pay cash and accept delivery here of their purchases.

Fish Accuses New Deal

In a radio address, Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, called "upon all would-be Republican and Democratic candidates for President in 1940 to make their positions known, without evasion or reservation, on this issue of keeping out of foreign wars."

"We know where the New Deal Administration stands. It stands for internationalism, intervention, secret diplomacy, military alliances, and against our traditional American foreign policy of neutrality, non-intervention, peace and no entangling alliances."

will group cases where this can be done, but there will be a suitable selection of local cases.

Such a program will require a greatly increased staff, possibly double the number of attorneys—now 65 or 70 in number—in the anti-trust division. It will thus be up to Congress to vote funds for an increased staff.

How far labor will be involved will depend on tthe facts disclosed in the investigation, it is said. The department has had, during the history of the antitrust laws, about 80 cases in the building field, of which several have been against labor unions.

Aside from price-fixing, a frequent complaint which may figure in the expected prosecutions will be the practice by various groups, both employer and employe, of protecting their particular line of work. "Middlemen" make it impossible to save on large-scale construction, it was said, by requiring that they be permitted to handle certain processes. Painters sometimes, for example, have insisted on processes involving the maximum amount of painting work.

Contractor practices, such as identical bidding resulting from some kind of concerted action, coercive measures, and tie-ups with supply firms, building and loan associations, and labor unions, are undergoing scrutiny.

The Government, in carrying out its housing programs, has received frequent complaints of identical bidding. Complaints have been made that contractors in some instances arrange bids so as to take turns in building projects, and that, if a contractor does not "play ball," he may find that he cannot get supplies, financing, or labor. Examples also are cited of "social ostracism" by associates.

Sheehy and Calvert Back Bill to Admit 20,000 German Waifs

Protestant and Catholic leaders yesterday joined Government officials in asking a Congressional committee to give its approval to the Wagner-Rogers plan for opening the doors of this country to 20,000 German refugee children in 1939 and 1940.

Dr. Maurice Sheehy, head of the Department of Religious Education at Catholic University, warned that defeat of the proposed legislation would appear to Nazis as an indication of American "indifference" to persecution and as "a friendly gesture to Mr. Hitler." Dr. Samuel McCrea Caverl, executive secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, declared the plan "is regarded in the churches as a practical expression of the spirit of religion."

German "Terror" Described

Former Gov. Philip La Follette, of Wisconsin, head of the Progressive Party, made a brief appearance before the joint committee to tell of the "terror" under which the people of Germany now live.

"In my judgment," said the ex-governor, "if a secret, free and untrammeled vote was held in Germany, 75 per cent of the people would vote against the present regime."

La Follette said it was a mistake to regard the German situation as "strictly a minority problem of Jews or Catholics." Many other German families, he said, "wouldn't hesitate" to send their children away to foreign lands.

Miss Katharine Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau, testified that the program would involve "only a very reasonable expansion of existing services."

Representative Rogers (Republican), of Massachusetts, author of a companion resolution to Senator Wagner's, indicated she looked upon the scheme as merely temporary and said she thought the children should be returned to their own homes when conditions changed in Germany.

However, D. Robert Yarnall, a Philadelphia manufacturer who has interested himself in relief of Austrian and German children since 1920, advised the committee that there is no hope of amelioration of the German government's policy toward "non-Aryans" and Jews.

Face 'Degradation'

Yarnall, who is connected with the American Friends Service Committee, said that when he was in Germany recently, "the misery of the Jews was quite beyond description, and the groups with which we were working—the non-Aryans—were in a situation scarcely better."

"I cannot express to you in sufficiently vivid terms the utterly hopeless future faced by the non-Aryan children in Germany. There is no possibility of an adequate education for them nor any possibility of a normal or decent life," said Yarnall. He said the children affected by the bill would otherwise be condemned to a life of "unspeakable degradation."

Newbold Morris, president of the New York City Council, told the committee he was descended from "Revolutionary forebears who fled from Germany many years ago and settled in the Bronx."

Morris, treasurer of the non-sectarian committee for German refugee children, reminded the committee that under the proposed measure, the children "must meet every requirement of the immigration law that applies to all immigrants who enter this country. They can only be admitted if satisfactory assurances shall have been given by responsible private individuals or by responsible private organizations that they will not become public charges."

Federal Judge Sees Murphy, Quits

By the Associated Press.

Attorney General Murphy said yesterday that Federal Judge J. Warren Davis, of Philadelphia, had sent in a letter "requesting retirement at the pleasure of the President."

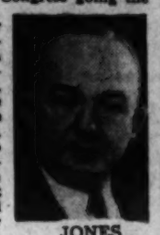
It was stated the request was likely to take effect immediately.

Asked whether Senator Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey, had been recommended to succeed Judge Davis, the Attorney General replied that he had.

Murphy added he had held a long conference with Judge Davis before he received his leter. Murphy did not elaborate on the conference.

On Capitol Hill

The stream of advice-laden college professors to the Halls of Congress yesterday was passed by a member of Congress going the other way.



JONES

The member was Chairman Marvin Jones (Democrat), of Texas, of the House Agriculture Committee, who was to act as consultant on farm legislation at a Harvard University School of Public Legislation seminar in Cambridge.

Jones' own college work was done at Southwestern University and the University of Texas.

A House Indian Affairs subcommittee yesterday investigated charges that John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has been represented in a private law suit by Government attorneys. Representative Schafer (Republican), of Wisconsin, sub-committee member, declared that Herbert S. Ward and Wallace Howland, both on the Government pay roll, were acting as counsel for Collier.

Members of a Senate sub-committee agreed tentatively to exclude air transportation from the Wheeler-Truman railroad bill.

The original measure would have provided uniform control by the Interstate Commerce Commission over all other forms of transportation and over air carriers for rate-making provision.

The sub-committee decided, members said, to leave air rates under regulation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority on the ground that the airlines were not a major competitor of other modes of transportation.

The strains of mountain music brought three score visitors crowding into the offices of Senator Burke (Democrat), Nebraska. They were played by Will Schroeder, of Kilgore, Nebr., his wife and seven children.

"We're just bustin' around the country playing and paying off our mortgage," Schroeder said. "We haven't been able to make a crop out there for a long time, but we're getting the mortgage paid this way."

Representative Thomas D. Winter (Republican) Kansas, introduced a bill to repeal the 1938 agricultural adjustment act, foundation of the New Deal farm program, effective January 1, 1940. The proposal will be referred to the pro-New Deal Agriculture Committee where it is expected to die.

U. S. Investigates Annenberg Taxes, Murphy Says

By the Associated Press.

Attorney General Murphy said yesterday the Government was investigating an income tax case involving Moe L. Annenberg, Philadelphia publisher.

The attorney general added at his press conference that the Government also had been pursuing an anti-trust case against Annenberg "for a year or more."

"If a delinquency grows out of a mistake or a misunderstanding," he explained, "none of that is criminal. To be indictable it has to be done with criminal intent."

He added that "tens of thousands" make mistakes in tax returns, "who are not criminally responsible."

The amount involved in the income tax case, Murphy said, was "likely to be" more than $500,000.

Miss Perkins Speeds Hearing For Bridges

Orders Affidavits and Information Studied in Stecker Case Light

By the Associated Press.

A new phase of the Harry Bridges deportation case began yesterday when Secretary of Labor Perkins prepared to give the West Coast C. I. O. leader a hearing on charges that he is a Communist.

Immigration officers in San Francisco, Portland and Seattle, Miss Perkins said at a press conference, have been ordered to assemble affidavits and information in the case for a speedy hearing. She said date of the hearing would depend on how quickly this data could be assembled.

Communist Proof Sought

Deportation of the C. I. O. leader, who came to the United States from Australia in 1920 and figured in the 1934 West Coast longshoremen's strike, would depend, Miss Perkins asserted, upon whether the Government was able to prove he was a member of the Communist Party when served with a deportation warrant a year ago, and that the party advocated overthrow of the Government by force and violence. Bridges had denied membership in the party.

The case became the center of hot controversy in Congress when the Labor Department delayed proceedings against him for a year awaiting a Supreme Court ruling on Communist Party membership as grounds for deportation.

The Secretary said she ordered the Immigration Service to prepare the Bridges case in light of the Supreme Court ruling in the Joseph G. Strecker case Monday that past membership in the party was not grounds for deportation.

New Affidavits Filed

When one reporter asked whether she thought it would be futile to proceed with the Bridges case in view of the Strecker decision, Miss Perkins said:

"We don't think it would be futile to continue with the Bridges case, but the evidence has to be examined."

She asserted the department had "many new affidavits" and that the original affidavits purporting to show his connection with the party were being examined to determine whether they applied to his case.

She said: "There is nothing in the record to show that he ever advocated overthrow of the Government by force or violence," and added that "we will have to show that the party advocated overthrow of the Government."

Records Show Pendergast Lost Heavily on Ponies

Kansas City, April 21 (AP).—Boss Tom Pendergast, whose heavily-backed candidates for Governor and United States Senator usually were winners, had a much harder time picking a winner in a horse race.

Evidence the ponies were not so profitable to him as his other activities was heard today by a Federal grand jury which indicted him two weeks ago on income tax evasion charges.

Sam C. Blair, assistant district attorney, said a bookmaker's record submitted to the grand jury showed the Kansas City Democratic leader lost $74,159 in November, 1938, and won $43,566 through the month of December.

Newark N. J., police seized the records from Ike Steloff in a recent raid. Blair said the record showed Pendergast owed Steloff $34,000 when the books were taken.

U. S. Poised To Intervene in Coal Deadlock

Action Forecast Today As U. S. Orders Cause Mine Boom in Wales

By the Associated Press.

The Administration, watching with growing concern the deadlock in the soft coal wage conference in New York, appeared ready last night to take some definite intervention action before tomorrow.

With reports reaching the Capital that the Appalachian coal operators and the United Mine Workers Union were making no progress toward a contract settlement, Government sources said these steps might be taken soon:

Appointment of a special mediator to offer the Administration's services in helping the negotiators reach an agreement.

Appointment of a special mediation board of three members to try to negotiate an agreement.

Inquiry Threatened

Representative Kennedy (Democrat), New York, meanwhile inserted a statement in the Congressional record threatening to introduce a resolution for an inquiry into the coal shutdown.

Joe Ozanic, president of the A. F. of L.'s Progressive Mine Workers of America, made public through the A. F. of L. his demands that the rights of the progressives be protected in event the Government responds to "commercial and political" pressure to intervene in the deadlock.

In letters to Secretary Perkins and the Senate Labor Committee, Ozanic attacked John L. Lewis, leader of the United Mine Workers, for insisting on either a closed shop contract or elimination of strike penalty clauses in any new agreement.

U. S. Orders Boom Wales

New York, April 21 (AP).—Diminishing supplies pushed soft coal to higher levels today to the benefit of foreign mines as James F. Dewey, Federal Labor Department conciliator, tried to bring deadlocked operators of the eight-State Appalachian area and representatives of the United Mine Workers of America (C. I. O.) to an agreement on a new contract.

Dewey discussed the matter first with operator negotiators after a telephone conservation with Washington. When he emerged late today he said no progress had been made and added that "tthe Administration is keenly interested in the seriousness of the situation."

Complaints on mounting coal shortages reached the bituminous conference from all parts of the country today, while from Cardiff, Wales, came word that orders from the United States in the last two weeks had brought a boom to the depressed areas of the South Wales coal industry.

For the second time, Mayor F. H. LaGuardia asked President Roosevelt to intervene.

Envoy to Haiti Asks Recall of Army Adviser

Mayer, Col. Heidner Disagreed on Role of U. S. Military Mission

A row between the American Minister to Haiti and the head of our military mission there over control of the mission has brought a demand from the State Department for the latter's recall, it was learned last night.

The trouble between Minister Ferdinand Mayer and Lieut. Col. Samuel J. Heidner, who was loaned by the War Department to the Haitian Republic last fall to bolster its combined army and police force, arose over demands of the former that Col. Heidner move into garde headquarters and practically take command of the force, it is said.

Heidner, according to word reaching here, refused, holding that such tactics would arouse opposition in the island republic and defeat its own ends.

Scandal Rocked Nation

In the capacity of adsiver to Haitian President Stenio Vincent, he has started reorganizing the garde, establishing a military academy, and gaining the confidence of the nation's military and political leaders.

Eighteen months ago a scandal in the garde rocked the foundations of the little republic. Several officers were arrested on charges of attempting to murder the military adviser to the president, Maj. Armand, who had become the virtual ruler of the garde, and overthrow the government. The commandant fled the country. One of the officers was executed and the others sentenced to prison. It was then the American military mission was requested.

Minister Has Last Word

Fearful that the garde might fall to pieces and the country revert to a condition that might require armed intervention, the Minister sought to have the mission take control. Heidner has urged instead a slow process under which he and his staff would obtain the support and confidence of the army and president.

Since, however, Minister Mayer has asked that Col. Heidner be recalled, and the State Department has backed him up, the War Department, since the question involved, is one of foreign policy, will undoubtedly comply, officials state.

Woman Admits Poisoning 3 For Insurance

Witnesses Tell of Invitation to Join Murder Ring

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, April 21.—Mrs. Carina Favato, 44-year-old boarding house keeper, dramatically halted her trial on a murder charge today by pleading guilty to poisoning her common-law husband, her step-son and another man to collect insurance money.

She was on trial on a charge of poisoning her step-son, Philip Ingrao, 17. It was part of a widespread insurance-murder plot, the State charged.

Earlier, witnesses testified they had been invited to join a poison ring which one said operated in Wilmington, Del., New York and New Jersey as well as in Philadelphia. Herman Petrillo, a salesman, has been convicted of murder, with the death penalty mandatory, in another trial growing out of a poison death.

The State had asked the death penalty for Mrs. Favato. Police have ordered more than a dozen bodies exhumed in the poison plot investigation. Two more persons are awating trial.

At the conclusion of the summation of the testimony for the court, Trial Judge Edwin O. Lewis announced:

"I am sure the other judges will agree with me that we will take into consideration Mrs. Favato's attitude and what co-operation she gives the district attorney's office whether the punishment will be the electric chair or life imprisonment."

Besides the poisoning of her step-son, Philip Ingrao, 17, a year ago, Mrs. Favato pleaded guilty to charges she poisoned his father, Charles Favato, four years ago, and Giuseppe Di Martino in 1937.

Mrs. Favato also pleaded guilty to defrauding insurance companies of about $28,000 on the lives of the three, and to charge of conspiring with others to murder.

Dutch Trade Swing to U. S. Believed Near

Hague Official Tells Hopkins of Growing Coolness to Nazis

Dutch dissatisfaction over German trade methods may enable the United States to gain a larger share in the Netherlands market, the Commerce Department disclosed yesterday.

The department said Jesse F. Van Wickel, American commercial attache at The Hague, had informed Secretary Hopkins German barter methods had resulted in the freezing of 37,000,000 Dutch guilders in the Reich.

Van Wickel said these sums could be cleared only by increased Dutch purchases of German goods, which German manufacturers in many cases found it impossible immediately to ship.

U. S. Penalizes Nazi Goods

His observations on the worsening condition of German economy came on the eve of the Treasury's imposition of 25 per cent countervailing penalty duties upon German subsidized exports to the United States.

Going into effect at 1 p. m. tomorrow, the week-end closing hour for United States customs houses, the duties are expected further to constrict the exports, without which Reichsfuehrer Hitler has said Germany "must die."

Van Wickel said the Netherlands in 1938 absorbed German goods valued at $165,524,000 and sold goods valued at $84,653,000 in the Reich.

Overloading of German industry with armament orders, he said, put delivery dates on export industrial machinery as long as 18 months ahead, while a raw material shortage "impaired the quality of certain German exports."

Accordingly, he said, there is "no great impetus for Netherlanders to increase their purchases of German goods."

"Friendlier Feeling" Observed

The attache said the conclusion of the Dutch-American trade agreement had developed a "friendlier feeling" on the part of the Dutch toward trade with America, formerly handicapped by competitively high prices and high shipping costs.

Some of the feeling disappeared in recent months, he added, due to extraordinary American customs charges on Netherlands dairy and meat products. He declared:

"As business conditions improve here and the benefits of the United States reciprocal policy are felt in a larger trade, there should arise a further stimulus for the purchase of United States goods.

"German trade with the Netherlands is so large that if only a portion of it could be switched to United States sources, that small portion would represent a considerable value."

D.A.R. to Lay Tablet on Grave Of Virginia's Boy Patriot

Memory of Daniel McCarty, A Lieutenant in Revolutionary War And Washington Kinsman, to Be Honored

A bronze memorial tablet will be dedicated Sunday on the grave of Lieut. Daniel McCarty, 16-year-old Fairfax County patriot who flared up with his kinsman, George Washington, about the British King and fought it out at the Brandywine and Germantown.

The tablet will be placed by the Fort Belvoir-Fairfax County Chapter, D. A. R., on the grave in the old McCarty burial grounds, on what is now the Fort Belvoir rifle range where the firing beats a tattoo above a distinguished, sleeping assemblage.

In the burial plot, where the original grave stones of the family still are in place, are Lieut. McCarty's father, Maj. Dennis McCarty; his mother, Sarah Ball McCarty, a cousin of George Washington, and his wife, the daughter of George Mason, of Gunston Hall.

Lieut. McCarty was active in the civic and religious life of Fairfax. He served on the vestry of Pohick Episcopal Church. It once was his duty to submit the resignation of Georget Washington as a vestryman of Pohick. He served in various county offices and in the House of Burgess.

The memorial services will be held in Pohick Church at 2 p. m., followed by services at the grave. Mrs. W. C. Wilburn, of Arlington, regent of the chapter, will preside, assisted by Dr. Jesse Thornton Scott, of Vienna, past regent; Mrs. Herbert H. Haar, of Lorton, historian, and Mrs. C. A. Langston, of Pohick, chairman of the committee on historical markers.

Guests of the chapter will include Mrs. Charles A. Swann Sinclair, Virginia State regent and past national president of the Children of the American Revolution; Superintendent Cecil C. Wall, of Mount Vernon; Louis C. Hertle, of Gunston Manor; Wade H. Ellis, of Ribbon Lodge, and Charles H. Callahan, commissioner of revenue of Alexandria.

Warsaw, April 21 (AP).—Poland took punitive action today against four German citizens convicted or accused of "insulting the Polish nation" and of spreading false news.

At Chohnice, two Germans were sentenced to a year in prison for "insulting Poland" and another was imprisoned for "spreading false news." At Karwina, a German was arrested for using allegedly insulting language.

The Polish press stressed that, despite apparent calm in Danzig, relations between Germany and Poland still lacked warmth.

Californians Mass to Battle Grasshoppers for Their Crops

Wriggling Blanket of Insects Spreads Over San Joaquin Valley; Crickets Attack Simultaneously in Oregon

By the Associated Press.

Coalinga, Calif., April 21. — A spectacular contest between man and insect over the rich agricultural crops of the southern San Joaquin valley began tonight.

A horde of half-grown grasshoppers moved greedily into lush stands of flax, barley and cotton. Farmers, state authorities and county agricultural experts massed to launch a large scale poison attack.

Surveyors reported the area of greatest infestation was 35 miles wide and 100 miles long. In some spots the insects were so thick they resembled a wriggling brownish-green blanket.

Growers asserted the insects already had overrun half of the 4,000-acre Pleasant Valley Farming Co. holdings nine miles northeast of Coalinga, and were heading slowly toward other crops in the comparatively new agricultural community.

Reports also were issued the grasshoppers had appeared in Yolo, Yuba, Colusa and Lassen counties, in the equally rich Sacramento Valley to the north.

Still farther north CCC workers —both Indian and white—laid plans to combat a cricket infestation of the Warm Springs Indian Reservation in Oregon.

The ugly, evil-smelling crickets appeared over sections of 100 square miles of semi-desert lands, eating every green thing in sight except the bitter juniper trees. The insect attack there was described as the worst in many years.

On top of the grasshopper threat in California, John Quail, assistant Fresno County farm adviser, said leaf roller moths, a dreaded pest in California's extensive vineyards, were developing in some San Joaquin areas.

Quail declared the moths would do more damage than the grasshoppers, unless controlled.

Detective's Home Looted, Youth Flees

A youthful burglar suspected of entering 40 homes in the Southeast section during the past three months escaped through a shower of police bullets early yesterday after ransacking the home of Detective Sergeant Charles Warfield.

Detective Sergts. Thomas McVearry and Howard Ogle stopped a youth, about 18, at Seventeenth street and Massachusetts avenue southeast about 3:30 a. m. The boy fled and McVearry fired five shots at the fleeing figure. Warfield, of 1634 Massachusetts avenue southeast, awakened by the shots, found his home ransacked, silverware piled on a table and a radio and blanket missing.

Warfield's neighbor, Edward J. Prendable, discovered $17 had been taken from a cupboard and $4 from a child's bank.

Freed Prisoner Sues for $10 'Gift'

Robert Gray, of 13 Florida avenue northeast, yesterday asked District Court to compel the District Commissioners to give him the $10 he did not get when he was released from Lorton Reformatory.

Gray asserted that an act of Congress requires that each prisoner be given $10 when set free. Ray L. Huff, superintendent of penal institutions, declared the $10 to be a gratuity and not a right.

Girl Gets Prison Term She Wanted

Paducah, Ky., April 21 (INS).—Refusing to tell who she is, an attractive blond woman of 25 tonight was sentenced to ten years in prison for attempting to holdup two women with a toy pistol shortly after she arrived in Paducah by bus from Chicago.

Taken aback at the severity of her sentence, which a judge described as "the lightest possible under the circumstances," the woman said:

"I came here to do this. I wanted to be arrested—to 'fade out' while the man I love marries another girl. If I disappear for a time I know they'll marry. But I didn't bargain on ten years!"

Judge Parker Tells U. S. Attorneys to Avoid '3d Degree'

By the Associated Press.

Judge John J. Parker, senior judge of the United States Circuit Courts of Appeal, said yesterday that the use of "third degree" methods by Government prosecutors was "unworthy of the judicial system."

In an address before the Attorney General's conference of United States attorneys, the Charlotte, N. Car. jurist said other practices which must be frowned upon were the use of evidence obtained in violation of constitutional rights and the "unconscionable" use of technicalities to secure for the Government advantages "which the consciences of right-thinking men and women would condemn.

"Men expect and have a right to expect," he added, "that the Government will be just and fair in its dealings with its citizens, and that the representative of the Government will not use the great power of his office for the oppression of anyone or deny even to the most abandoned criminal his rights under the law."

Ciano Reported After Yugoslav Link to Axis

Week-End Parleys To Start Today on Anti-Comintern Pact

By the Associated Press.

Rome, April 21.—Italian attention turned tonight to Foreign Minister Count Ciano's trip to Venice for week-end talks beginning tomorrow with the Yugoslav foreign minister, Alexander Cinca-Markovich, which may pull Yugoslavia into the anti-Comintern line-up.

Diplomats predicted the Italians would try to bring Belgrade into the pact sponsored by the Rome-Berlin axis aganst international communism.

(In Belgrade it was announced Cinca-Markovich would go to Berlin next week after his Venice conferences, backing reports Yugoslavia would co-operate, "on the basis of a new understanding," with the Rome-Berlin axis in foreign affairs.)

No Pledge From Allies

Usually well-informed quarters expected Yugoslavia to seek continued friendship with her axis neighbors without actually signing up.

Although traditionally sympathetic to Great Britain and France, Yugoslavia so far has received no public pledges from those nations in their program of guaranteeing smaller powers support against aggression.

The Venice meeting was regarded as a continuation of Italian-Hungarian conferences just concluded here. It was felt Count Ciano had obtained from Hungarian Premier Count Paul Teleky and his foreign minister, Count Stephen Csaky, material necessary to lay before Cinca-Markovich a basis for satisfaction of Hungary's minority claims on Yugoslavia.

Rome's Founding Marked

Hungary, with over 100,000 of her people in the northeastern tip of Yugoslavia, was believed to have sought Italian aid in obtaining something like autonomy for them if not actual territorial concessions.

Both Premier Mussolini and King Vittorio Emanuele took leading parts in a fete today celebrating the legendary anniversary of the founding of Rome in 753 B. C. Il Duce distributed medals and prizes to laborers and farmers. The King presided over an assembly of the Royal Academy.

tality and such slavery are not necessary for the country to display its full activity."

At another point he said:

"For 14 months in the heart of Europe great victories have been won solely because of the virtue of products from the war factories of our adversaries.

"We have seen entire countries go down silently into the pits of history. The rhythm of the armaments race grows faster every day."

New Bonds Issued

The new decrees were accompanied by an official notice of a new national defense bond issue. A communique said the bonds would be for two years, but failed to state the amount of the loan.

At the tail end of the decrees was one designed to impose official supervision over foreign propaganda in France paid for by funds sent from the outside.

Reynaud said his entire plan was within the bounds of the three-year economic plan laid down when he took office in Premier Edouard Daladier's cabinet.

Franc Remains Firm

The finance chief indicated a large number of government employes would be dismissed from their jobs to reduce ordinary government costs. Some would be absorbed in the arms industry and others would replace workers mobilized.

Reynaud said the franc had remained firm and capital was returning to the country steadily.

He disclosed an order for transfer of 5,000,000,000 francs ($132,000,000) from the currency stabilization fund to the Bank of France as a result of successful operations of the last few months.

Industrial production was increased 12 per cent over that of last November, he said.

Britain to Take Over BBC Radio Network June 7

London, Saturday, April 22 (U.P.).—The government will take over the British Broadcasting Corporation June 7, the Daily Mail reported today.

This would mean the B. B. C. would become a government news service and to some extent a propaganda machine under government control. It was understood broadcast news bulletins would be supervised and recruiting appeals would be made for all the military services.

A clause in the B. B. C. charter authorized government seizure "if and whenever in the opinion of the postmaster general an emergency shall have arisen in which it is expedient for the public service that His Majesty's government shall have control over transmission of messages."

Ottawa Report Belies Sub Scare

Ottawa, April 21 (Canadian Press). Defense Minister Ian Mackenzie told the House of Commons today a fishing vessel had been found which had been in Halifax harbor at the exact time and position where an unidentified submarine was reported seen early Wednesday.

While he did not say so, the defense minister left the inference there was no submarine and the fishing vessel had been mistaken for an undersea craft.

Silk Stockings From Queen Mark Lilibeth's Bow to 'Teens

Duke, Wallis Send Movie Camera; King, Pearls and a Necklace

By the Associated Press.

Windsor, Eng., April 21.—Princess Elizabeth entered her 'teens today and received from her mother, Queen Elizabeth, a gift symbolic of the fact the heiress presumptive is becoming a young lady. It was a box of long silk stockings.

Lilibeth arose early to greet this thirteenth birthday, which started her on an intensive training period for her debut at 18 and, ultimately, for the time when England again may be ruled by a "Good Queen Bess."

If Elizabeth has no brothers and outlives her father, King George, she will wear the crown of the world's greatest empire, so her birthday was of more than casual importance to Britons.

Would Like to Be a Boy

Tall and a bit gangling, Elizabeth no longer wears half socks and a clip has replaced ribbons in her brown bobbed hair.

Still, not the least of the day's pleasure for her was a canter through beautiful Windsor great park with one of her best friends, her pony. Elizabeth loves horses so much she once remarked that she would like to be one if she had a chance to be something besides a princess.

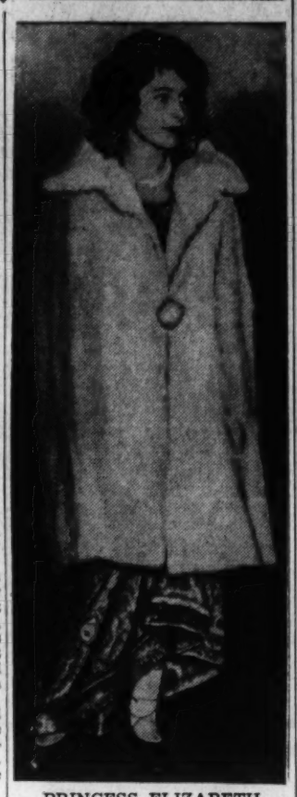
Today she was so preoccupied with a farewell to childhood she even forgot to smile for the photographer until the King asked her. "Put on a nice birthday smile," he said. She obeyed.

Elizabeth went for a walk before breakfast with her 8-year-old sister, Margaret Rose. Then after breakfast she opened presents from the royal family and personal friends.

Movie Camera from Edward

Her father gave her another pearl for her necklace and a diamond bracelet. A silver dressing set came from her grandmother, Queen Mother Mary.

Her uncle, former King Edward VIII, now the Duke of Windsor, and his duchess, the American-born former Wallis Warfield, sent a movie camera from France.



PRINCESS ELIZABETH

A special mail bag arrived with greetings from children of many sections of the empire, but there was no time to read them all today.

There was a changing of the guard to watch, and after that a big party of cheering school children to be greeted at the castle gates. After them there was a birthday tea party and finally a motion picture show in the evening.

Britain, Paris Study Soviet Plan for Pact

Japanese attack on the U. S. S. R. in the far east in exchange for Soviet pledges to help defend England, France, Rumania, Poland, Turkey and other countries coming within the Anglo-French anti-aggression fold. This goes far beyond the mutual defense proposals originally forwarded to Moscow.

A triple entente to serve as a self-constituted "guardian of peace," as proposed by Russia, would enormously strengthen the Anglo-French bloc, but, on the other hand, would deal the final blow to Chamberlain's appeasement policy and almost certainly arouse intensified hostility in Germany and Italy.

The British and French may therefore decide to forward new suggestions calculated to modify the Soviet plan to some extent and still bring Russia into Europe's new "peace chain."

Conscription a Question

It is considered possible that the cabinet may consider once more the question of introducing military conscription in England. The French, it was learned, have been urgently telegraphing the British foreign office during the past few days, arguing that British conscription would be the most impressive answer to Hitler and Premier Mussolini.

If the cabinet, smashing all British peacetime precedent, decides to introduce conscription, it is likely that an army of 500,000 could be quickly raised from among youths between 18 and 20.

Complexity of the negotiations to build the "peace chain" was emphasized today when it was learned Turkey was insisting on an important reservation, namely, that she should not be called upon to aid the allies unless a war directly affects to Balkans or the eastern Mediterranean.

The Rumanian legation in London meanwhile gategorically denied that Rumanian Foreign Minister Grigore Gafencu had given any interviews to Berlin newspapers. The German papers quoted Gafencu as saying that "no two-sided agreement will arise from the British guarantee to Rumania." Before the legation's denial, this quotation caused considerable annoyance to British government circles.

Chinese Request Sidestepped

Gafencu, who left Berlin last night after talking with Hitler, is scheduled to arrive in London Sunday. It was believed the British will attempt to negotiate a reciprocal defense pact with Gafencu, as they did with Polish Foreign Minister Josef Beck shortly after Britain's announced a military pledge to Poland.

The British government, it was learned, sidestepped a definite request from China submitted by the Chinese Ambassador in London that China be included in any non-aggression guarantee system. Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax told the ambassador that while China's inclusion was "desirable," it would be "premature" at the present time.

King George today approved Chamberlain's appointment of Leslie Burgin to fill the new cabinet post of supply minister, pending parliamentary legislation authorizing the ministry. Euan Wallace, financial secretary of the Treasury, was elevated to cabinet rank by appointment to the job of transport minister vacated by Burgin.

the cabled descriptions of huge anti-aircraft guns exhibited for the first time yesterday.

The reaction of Paris, said Propaganda Minister Goebbels' Der Angriff, could be summed up in the words, "Hitler can go far with this Germany." London, Der Angriff added, thought the German anti-aircraft guns were "a new terror for bombers."

The Lokalanzeiger found that the "German power impressed the world," and the Boersen Zeitung said a Danish general, recounting his observations of the parade to his countrymen, called it "the greatest experience of my life."

Duce Sends Long Wire

Messages published today showed Hitler and Mussolini again had affirmed their inseparable union in the Rome-Berlin axis.

Il Duce, in a long telegram, reiterated that the friendship between Rome and Berlin "cannot be disturbed by the recurring attempts of our enemies . . .

"Sometime they will have to convince themselves that they are following a false course, because fascism and national socialism (Nazism) are the way of justice and peace."

Hitler replied that "with thanks I bring anew the assurances of my indestructible friendly ties with you and the Fascist Italy created by you. . . ."

Reject Mediation

Hitler was said to be planning a sharp rejection of President Roosevelt as an intermediary between the democracies and the authoritarian states.

The source was the thrice-weekly commentary, Dienst Aus Deutschland, which has close connections with the foreign office.

The commentary asserted:

"This much can already be said, without anticipating the Hitler speech for next week-end: Mediation from overseas, which in the opinion of many represents a crude attempt to establish war guilt thesis a priori, will be rejected most sharply on the part of Germany."

Slovak-Hungary Row Minimized

Budapest, April 21 (AP).—Artillery engagements between Hungarian and Slovak border troops at the Hungarian village of Sarosremete, near Ungvar, simmered down tonight to a diplomatic dispute.

Charges of responsibility for the affair were exchanged, but the Hungarian foreign office declared the incident was due to a "local misunderstanding."

Asks $6,000,000 for Arsenals

Purchase of commercial dry-docks at Hunter Point, Calif., was recommended by the special naval board, to provide additional facilities for repairing vessels on the West Coast. The board, headed by Rear Adm. Joseph R. Defrees, valued the property at $3,500,000, and urged that an additional $2,500,000 be spent in improving the shipyard as an annex of the Mare Island Navy Yard.

Moscow, Calm, Holds Ukraine Strong Enough to Defend Self

Soviet Journal Warns Britain, France Not to Place Too Much Reliance on Poland; Rest of World Told to Worry About Hitler

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, April 21.—Scarcely an hour's airplane flight now separates Reichsfuehrer Hitler's armed forces in the north and south from the western border of Soviet Russia.

But is Moscow worried?

Not noticeably.

It only is a little annoyed at people abroad who, Russians say, shed crocodile tears over what they call the perilous position of the Ukraine.

Let the rest of the world worry about Hitler, say Soviet leaders; the Ukraine can take care of itself.

Even the German threat to Poland, which recently sent Col. Joseph Beck, Polish foreign minister, post haste to London to negotiate a mutual defense agreement with Great Britain, could not get Moscow excited.

Reports of Soviet aid for Poland were sharply and officially denied, and Le Journal De Moscou, frequently used for important statements of Soviet policy, took occasion to warn Britain and France not to place too much reliance on Poland which, it said, last September "itself participated in the dismemberment of Czecho-Slovakia."

Le Journal's outspoken attack revived once again the rumors which always are bobbing up to the effect Berlin and Moscow were getting ready to "get together" at Poland's expense.

It is never forgotten that in 1772, 1793 and 1795 Prussia, Austria and Russia participated in the complete dismemberment of Poland. Nor is it forgotten that Hitler today speaks for both Austria and Prussia.

Some of the most seasoned observers in Moscow, however, do not think Stalin is even contemplating such a bargain with Hitler.

They point out that every official and semi-official elucidation of Soviet policy in recent weeks—including Stalin's remarks about foreign attempts to "poison the atmosphere" between Moscow and Berlin—has re-emphasized the essential independence of Moscow's foreign policy.

Moscow meanwhile is letting it be known that the Ukraine is strong, immeasurably stronger than it was when the Germans occupied it in 1918.

Britain Reported Set to Recognize Albania Conquest

Rome, April 21.—Britain's decision to recognize the acquisition of the Albanian crown by the King of Italy is understood to have been conveyed to Premier Mussolini by the British Ambassador, Lord Perth, who is about to retire.

It is believed the British government has decided that Sir Percy Lorraine, Perth's successor, will be accredited to King Victor Emmanuel III as King of Italy and of Albania, Emperor of Ethiopia. He will be the first diplomat to be so accredited.

U. S. Philosophers Honor Dr. Benes

[In an address before the society, Dr. Benes blamed international violence on fanatical and incompetent leaders, special dispatches to The Post, said.—Editor's note.]

WHO SAID THE U.S.A. CAN'T EQUAL EUROPEAN BEERS?

37 International experts agree that today it's a toss-up between 3 of Europe's famous beers and 3 beers made in the U. S. A. It's good news to you because one of those beers is Gunther's... and costs you only a dime!

DOUBTLESS you've heard people rave about Danish, Dutch, German and Czechoslovak beers. You may have tasted them yourself and know how good they are.

But did you know that today the U. S. A. is making beer that is ranked on a par with Europe's most famous brews? It's a fact! And 37 international experts recently proved it.

How Experts Did It

It was at a recent congress of international experts that this exhaustive comparison was made of the best European and Domestic beers. All of these experts are members of the International Barmen Association, and all are of different nationalities now serving the finest bars of this country.

Not a single man knew what beer he was comparing. All he knew was that some were from abroad, some domestic.

And when the 37 experts had made all their comparisons here was the result:

FIRST: 3 world famous imported beers had scored 48 points.

3 fine beers made in this country had scored 50 points.

Virtually no difference.

SECOND: Each man had been asked to pick the beer he preferred to all the others. Here a European beer won. But only by 1 single vote.

Gunther's, the beer so well known in Maryland and Washington, came next, and actually led the other 2 imported beers.

Try Gunther's

Gunther's is a "Special Dry Lager," the kind most real beer-drinkers prefer. Gunther's ranks right up with the world's finest. YET HERE IT COSTS YOU NO MORE THAN ORDINARY BEERS! Gunther Brewing Co., Baltimore, Md.

Gentlemen:
On last Thursday evening, at a dinner of our members, held in the Empire Room of the Hotel Lexington, a very thorough and comprehensive test was made to determine the relative merits of famous imported and domestic beers.
It was gratifying to see how the standards of brewing in this country have produced beer so excellent in taste, body, and color; that three domestic beers were virtually comparable in every way with three world-famous imported beers.
Thirty-seven experts, all master bar-men and wine stewards, engaged in the test, and none were permitted to know the name of the beers they tasted until the test was concluded.
You may also be gratified to learn that Gunthers and one of the highest ranking beers, receiving, as it did, the second highest number of votes for first choice. It was only exceeded by one world-famous imported beer in the opinion of these experts.
Yours very truly,

Let it be known that Gunther's beer will always be brewed according to the highest standards of the art of brewing. We will never use any but the finest ingredients, and thus maintain the same remarkable dry lager quality that places it among the finest beers, domestic or imported.
The high cost of making Gunther's prohibits the giving away of premiums or prizes. All the value is in the Beer!

Church of the Week

Greenbelt Community Church Paces Growth of the Town

Greenbelt school building, which houses also the Greenbelt Community Church

Sunday School Has Over 400 Members; 350 in Congregation

Keeping pace with the development of Uncle Sam's $15,000,000 model village at Greenbelt, religion has made great strides there during the past year, according to the Rev. Robert Lee Kincheloe, leader of the Greenbelt Community Church.

There has been a notable increase in membership in both church and Sunday school, points out the pastor of the flock, whose spiritual life is centered in the very heart of the community — the Greenbelt school building. Members of Catholic, Jewish and Mormon faiths worship in various rooms of the school, the auditorium of which is utilized by the Community Church.

The Community Church hopes to have a building of its own, said the Rev. Mr. Kincheloe yesterday in the cozy study of his parsonage, which he occupies with Mrs. Kincheloe, whom he brought to Greenbelt as a bride.

However, a church edifice will not be realized until Greenbelters have acquired a sense of permanence, opines the minister. Federal workers, for the most part, they realize the imminent possibility of being transferred.

Launched in the fall of 1937, shortly after the "first settlers" moved in, the Community Church's activities were directed by a committee of Protestant laymen until recently, when a constitution was drawn up and special committees appointed.

Among the groups named was the committee on spiritual and social welfare, corresponding to deacons in a denominational church, headed by Harry Bates and Mrs. Lillian Mitchell. Their aides include Harold Alderton, Louis Bessemer, John Colliver, Robert Dove, Irving Johnston, John Teel, Mrs. Harry Bates, Mrs. Edward Halley, Mrs. Anna Lewis, Mrs. Robert Jacobsen, Mrs. James McCarl, Mrs. Paul Featherby, Mrs. Oscar Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. Linden Dodson.

Another backbone of the Community Church, says the Rev. Mr. Kincheloe, is the committee on finance, corresponding to the board of trustees in a denominational church. It includes Fred De Jager, chairman; Mrs. Miriam Provost, James Burke, George Eshbaugh, Edward Halley, James McCarl, William Neblett, Herbert Weatherby and Fred Wilde.

Sunday school activities are conducted by the committee on religious education, with L. W. Worley as superintendent; Harry Merryman, assistant; Harry Bates, secretary; Edward Halley, treasurer, and Mrs. Halley, recording secretary.

The school with its enrollment of more than 400 members; the young people's "junior hour;" and the intermediate and senior societies—all are units of which the cleric is proud. He leads the latter group, Mrs. Kincheloe the intermediates, and the "hour" is supervised alternately by Mrs. Lillian Mitchell, Mrs. Hartford Downs, Mrs. Denzil Wood and E. J. Swales. The church membership is over 350.

Music, of course, is another interesting feature of the programs, and recently the church secured the services of Mrs. C. F. Linger, of Arlington, to assist the choir on Wednesdays and Sundays. The music committee includes Mrs. George Barr, Mrs. Max Hayes, William Neblett, church pianist; Eugene Sheets and Fred Wilde.

Potomac Lodge Of Masons Gets Old Charter

Original Grant, Found Among Forgotten Records, Is Returned

The original charter of Potomac Lodge, No. 5, oldest in Washington Masonry, was returned to the organization last night at ceremonies commemorating the sesqui-centennial of its founding.

Grand Master John H. Hessey, of Maryland, presented the charter, discovered recently among long-forgotten papers of the fraternity, to Fire Chief Stephen T. Porter, worshipful master of Potomac Lodge.

Also attending the ceremonies, held in the Masonic Hall, 1210 Wisconsin avenue northwest, was Grand Master Eugene E. Thompson, of the District of Columbia.

At Rites With Washington

During the exercises Past Master Frederick W. Englert read a history of the lodge.

Members of Potomac Lodge, he said, occupied an honored place at the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol, at which George Washington, master of Alexandria Lodge, officiated. A replica of the gavel used by the first President on that occasion was brought out for last night's exercises.

Others Attend Ceremonies

Democracies Won't Fight Till U. S. Joins Them, Writer From Rome Tells Editors

Editors

He was stationed in Madrid and Barcelona.

Collapse of the loyalist army he blamed on the fact that it really was two armies, one directed by Communists and the other by regular army men who had not gone over to Franco. Lack of discipline, Peters said, was glaring, with political commissars taking the place of top sergeants.

The editors, assembled at the National Press Club for the seventeenth annual convention of their society, spent most of the day and the evening listening to off-the-record talks. They will leave for the World's Fair today with an unprecedented amount of the "low-down."

Last night, at the Willard Hotel, their banquet hall became a veritable paddock for entires in the 1940 Presidential sweepstakes. Two Republican possibilities talked, District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, and Senator Robert A. Taft, of Ohio. They were answered by two prominent Democrats, Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson and Senator O'Mahoney. What they said was "under the rose."

General, 3 Women Talk

Maj. Gen. Harry H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Corps, spoke at luncheon. He talked on world aviation from a military standpoint but his remarks also were off the record.

At a morning session, the editors heard from three women writers and so freely did the trio speak their minds that President William Allen White referred to them as "hell-kittens."

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Gilmer, famous as Dorothy Dix, told the editors what she thought women read in newspapers. A white-haired, sweet-faced little woman with a New Orleans drawl, she also told some of the questions that had been asked in her many years of conducting an "advice" column. Some of them were:

Will I marry, and if so, how many children will I have and of what sex? I was born April 25 and my wife on November 19; are we congenial? Do you think I should kill my husband's mistress or would it be best to act indifferent?

Women Avid Readers

"There was a time," she said, "when the head of the house monopolized the paper and after he had devoured it along with his coffee and eggs he carried it downtown with him, on the theory that it was of no possible interest to his wife except to put on the kitchen shelves and wrap up bundles. But all of this is changed. The modern woman is an avid newspaper reader."

Some women, she said, like heavy editorials and Walter Lippmann. These she described as the "feminine intelligentsia."

Others, she said, like society news, birth and death notices and Hollywood divorce news. Almost all women, she added, like scandals and murders.

Excitement in News

"Perhaps," she continued, "it is because the average woman's life is rather monotonous and has few thrills in it that she likes to get her excitement out of the newspapers and the movies, just as she goes to them for her romance."

Beauty columns, cooking news, the lovelorn column and advertisements—particularly the advertisements—also hold interest for women readers, she said.

Inez Robb, of International News Service, told the editors that women's interest in newspapers today parallels that of men more than at any time in history. As with men, she said, the burning question for women is, "Will there be a war?"

President Would Be Editor

Mrs. Robb urged the editors to drop their "condescending" attitude toward society writers and treat them as valuable members of the staff.

Analyzing American newspapers, she said she discerned an inclination to pontificate too much. What was needed, she said, was "more humor, more lively reporting, less pontificating."

Doris Fleeson, Washington correspondent of the New York Daily News, told the editors bluntly that they ought to pay better salaries to newspaperwomen. She also—with "kindness and love"—gave them the psychological answer to President Roosevelt's criticism of the press.

"President Roosevelt," she said, "is suffering acutely from a suppressed desire to be a managing editor."

Masses Like Dictators

Rome Correspondent Gervasi, born in Baltimore of Italian immigrant parents, made it clear he did not have much admiration for fascism. But he warned Americans not to think for a moment that the masses of Italy are dissatisfied.

"They don't want to be liberated from the oppressor," Gervasi said. "For that matter, I think both Hitler and Mussolini are expressions of the fundamental desires of their people."

The German is a discipline-loving man who dreams of a Greater Reich. The Italian used to be a guitar-strummer, but that is not the case now. Scratch him and you find a Roman conqueror. And a guy has come along who tells him what he wants to hear."

Germans, Italians Ready

Gervasi said he thought Germany and Italy, plus their satellites, had "the edge on" the democracies from a military standpoint. One big advantage is, he said, that the Germans and Italians are ready to march, while the British and French are hoping they won't have to march.

Correspondent Peters, after experience at Madrid and Barcelona, came home with the definite conviction that a city cannot be bombed into a state of paralysis. But he also brought home the conviction that antiaircraft guns are not much protection against bombers. He said he never saw a raiding plane shot down by such guns.

The editors will meet this morning at the National Press Club for their final session. Resolutions will be adopted and new officers announced. At 11:55 a. m. they will entrain for the New York World's Fair.

Dakota Editor Exposed Fake in Drought Photos

The man who exposed "Yorick" is attending the convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. "Yorick" was a cow's skull that was getting a great play in the newspapers until Holger D. Paulson, of the Fargo (N. Dak.) Forum, got busy.

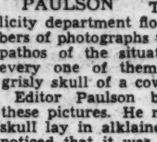
PAULSON

It was in the days when Rex Tugwell's Resettlement Administration was dramatizing the great Western drought. From Tugwell's publicity department flowed vast numbers of photographs to illustrate the pathos of the situation. In nearly every one of them appeared the grisly skull of a cow.

Editor Paulson beban studying these pictures. He noticed that the skull lay in alkliane dust. He also noticed that it was about 30 or 40 years old. After a bit of reporting, he discovered that the skull—now known as "Yorick"—was a stage "prop" which a Resettlement photographer took from place to place in the drought country. Being a good newspaperman and a Republican, Paulson printed the story and "Yorick" went out of ciruiation.

Klan's Nemesis Is Editor's Best Story-Teller

Grover Cleveland Hall of the Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser, is acknowledged to be the best story-teller at the convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.



HALL

Like most jolly people, however, he is capable of a ferocious wrath. In 1928 this won him a Pulitzer prize for the best editorial writing of the preceding year. His target was the Ku Klux Klan, then at the peak of its power in Alabama. When Hall got through denouncing the Klan's floggings and racial and religious intolerance, the hooded order hit the toboggan.

Editor Hall was born at Haleburg, Ala., 51 years ago and, like William Allen White, began his career as a printer's devil.

Delegates to the conference also are attending the convention of public health officers of North America which began yesterday and will close today.

Money

claim for Congress its pre-1934 control over money.

As the bill passed the House, Senator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, ranking minority member of the Senate Committee, derided the attempt to eliminate the President's "emergency" devaluation power as "trying to shut the attic window when the roof is off."

Senate Coalition Formed

The 1934 act gave the President power to reduce gold content of the dollar to not more than 60 per cent and not less than 50 per cent of former value. By proclamation, the President then cut the dollar gold content to 59.06 per cent, setting the dollar price of gold at $35 an ounce. Yesterday's extension continues the power further to reduce gold content by 9.06 per cent.

But while this is a temporary power, Senator Townsend in his statement yesterday declared another section of the gold reserve act gives the Secretary of Treasury permanent authority to do the same thing, without any restriction on the price paid for gold.

"Under its terms, the Secretary may change the price of gold from $35 an ounce to $20 an ounce or to $100 an ounce, or to any other price he chooses," Townsend said. His statement signaled an expected Senate coalition attempt to restrict not only the President's emergency gold devaluation power but the Secretary's authority as well.

Democrats Almost Solid

As Republicans concentrated their fire on devaluation features of the bill, House Democrats for the first time this session on a major bill united solidly behind their leaders to extend the money powers. Only four Texas Democrats, Representatives Dies, Lanham, Kilday and West, joined Republicans in the futile attempt to deny the devaluation power.

Chairman Somers of the House Coinage Committee, told the House the Administration had neither desire nor intent to alter further the gold value of the dollar at this time. But he argued the power is necessary to discourage other countries from depreciating further their currencies in order to acquire a competitive advantage in world markets.

He said the effect would be to give stability to international exchange rates in an unsettled international situation, and to enable the President to act promptly to deal with currency depreciation abroad.

Amendments Sidetracked

Republicans countered that the power should be discontinued to allay business fears. Led by Representative Reed (Republican), of Illinois, and Representative Luce (Republican), of Massachusetts, they contended there is no more deadening influence on business than uncertainity of the value in which commitments will be paid in the future.

An amendment by Luce to terminate devaluation powers was first defeated 152 to 84 on a standing vote and finally disposed of on rejection of Reed's motion to recommit the bill.

Half a dozen other Republican efforts to amend the measure were similarly sidetracked, as Democratic lines held unexpectedly firm. The lone minority amendment offered to the stabilization section by Reed, providing for an annual audit of the $2,000,000,000 fund by the General Accounting Office, was scrapped, 180 to 97.

An amendment by Representative Case (Republican), of South Dakota, providing in effect for return to specie payments, went out on a point of order.

Also ruled out on parliamentary points from the floor were two efforts by Representative Andresen (Republican), of Minnesota, to require foreign vendors of gold to spend the $14.33 difference between the former world price of the metal and the present prices for domestic purchases of farm and industrial products.

Shouted down were amendments by Representative Smith (Republican), of Ohio, to cut off the President's authority to devalue the silver dollar, and an amendment by Representative Taylor (Republican), of Tennessee, to terminate all of the President's money powers on January 1, 1940.

GAO Accused Of Slighting Merit Employe

Sen. Ellender Sifts Charges Emergency Worker Is Favored

Senator Ellender's special committee investigating charges of favoritism in the Federal civil service yesterday sought to determine whether emergency or merit employes have the best of it in obtaining promotions.

Several General Accounting Office officials were called to explain why R. R. G. Cockings, a merit employe, had failed to advance, while a kinsman of J. L. Baity, executive officer and assistant to the Comptroller General, had advanced from $1,800 in 1933, to $2,600.

Concerning his status, Cockings said he entered the GAO four years ago at $1,260, and now earns $1,620. He complained that opportunities for promotion to higher grades were denied him. It was Cockings' questioning that revealed the presence of Baity's niece and a nephew of his wife in the GAO employ. To Ellender's questioning, Baity admitted speaking on behalf of his relatives' application for employment, but emphatically denied having had anything to do with the promotion of his wife's nephew.

Ellender said he has many times heard the complaint that emergency employes, hired since 1933, have the advantage in promotions over merit employes. He said he would inquire more deeply into it. He was informed by the GAO officials that hundreds of letters come to them from Congressmen who wish to place people in employment, but the Congressmen are told that whoever is taken will have to stand or fall on merit. W. W. Richardson, personnel officer, said the GAO has 2,550 emergency employes approximately 2,200 under civil service.

D. E. Henry, spokesman for employes in the Norfolk, Va., Navy Yard, urged a better system of fixing efficiency ratings for the mechanics there.

Capt. Whitman Wins Approval For Rear Admiral

President Roosevelt yesterday approved the selection of Capt. Ralph Whitman of the Navy Civil Engineer Corps to be a rear admiral.

WHITMAN

Capt. Whitman was on duty at the Bureau of Yards and Docks here from 1934 until last January. He played an important part in the expansion of Navy yards and stations. He was a member of the recent special board which recommended a chain of naval bases at strategic points in both the Atlantic and Pacific.

A native of Boston, Whitman was graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1901 and entered the Navy in 1907. During the World War he was in charge of public works construction in San Domingo.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells.

Just get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a reliable "WOMAN'S" tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and those disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life.

Pinkham's is WELL WORTH trying.

Pedestrian

"No Left Turn." The average walker, seeing this sign, develops a slight sense of security and starts for the opposite curb on a proper signal. Suppose he leaves the southeast corner and walks north across the avenue toward the northeast corner. He has the green light ahead of him.

Midway, bearing down on his left, is one of those sleek, silent street cars making a left turn from Fourteenth street into the avenue—in spite of the "no left turn" sign. The first warning comes from the motorman's clanging bell when he is within a few feet of the startled pedestrian. This calls for a hasty retreat, but as the car passes the light on the northeast curb is still green and the walker continues on his way.

But not for long. On the westbound street car track comes another trolley, preparing to swing right into Fourteenth street against a red light on the northwest corner. It is time to duck again and the pedestrian does a balancing act in the tiny "safety" zone beside the tracks. After both these street cars have completed their turns, it is too late for the pedestrian to go on because his light has now turned red.

From this point, he has a fair chance of getting across, providing he sprints the moment his green signal shows. Once across, he may glance toward the northwest corner and a pole sees a sign reading: "Watch out for street cars turning on this red light." That's a big help. He couldn't see the sign from his starting point on the southeast curb and it doesn't do him any good after he gets across.

Policeman Kept Busy

With the exception of an almost endless stream of taxis turning from the avenue into Fourteenth street, the walker who chooses to cross from the Whelan drug store corner toward the Willard has a fairly easy time.

There is always a policeman on duty at this intersection, but he has his hands full without worrying about citizens' jangled nerves. Try this crossing sometime—it's good for that tired feeling.

The Prosecutor

Following up his instructive national conference on parole earlier in the week, Attorney General Murphy is now conducting a four-day conference of United States attorneys in the interests of more effective law enforcement. Both gatherings suggest that Mr. Murphy has quietly but systematically undertaken the task of improving the work of his department.

The National Parole Conference undoubtedly gave impetus to the long-neglected movement for scientific control over men and women released from prison. The conference of Federal prosecuting attorneys should be no less useful in establishing standards and securing uniform enforcement of Federal law throughout the country. In addition to hearing instructions from their chief, the prosecutors have an opportunity to exchange ideas and discuss common problems to their mutual advantage.

This conference is evidence of clear recognition on the part of the Attorney General of the importance of the prosecutor in any system of law enforcement. There have been indications from other sources, moreover, that Mr. Murphy will not be content to assemble district attorneys for discussion of their problems. He may also take steps to eliminate political considerations in the appointment of men to these vital positions. Certainly such a step would be consistent with his emphasis upon the importance of impartial and conscientious administration of justice.

Only judges are in need of greater impartiality and special qualifications for their posts than are prosecuting attorneys. If the high quality of justice of which Mr. Murphy speaks is to be attained, prosecutors will have to be taken completely out of the realm in which spoilsmen and job-hunters operate.

Of course, many appointments are now made on the basis of merit alone, and more of this type may be expected with Mr. Murphy at the head of the Justice Department. But that does not minimize the desirability of establishing a regular system for the selection of prosecutors free from the handicap of political pressure.

Sensible Advice

Not a single valid argument can be advanced for continuance of the Treasury's silver-buying program. Instead of encouraging the monetary use of silver, it has resulted in the abandonment of the silver standard in China and Hongkong and has seriously upset the currency systems of a number of countries.

Our huge silver accumulations have not helped us to solve our economic problems, or even to raise the price of silver itself. In fact, the world price of that metal is lower today than it was when the 1934 purchase act was passed, despite the support rendered the market by Treasury buying. Furthermore, although it has bought about 2,000,000,000 ounces of silver, the Treasury is not much nearer fulfillment of the terms of the law than it was at the time of its passage.

Meantime approximately $1,200,000,000 of silver certificates have been issued against the metal acquired. And a slightly greater amount could be issued against unpledged silver held by the Treasury. Testifying before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, pointed out that these silver certificates are displacing Federal Reserve notes in our currency system and increasing the volume of member-bank excess reserves, thereby adding to the danger of inflation.

Since approximately 90 per cent of the silver purchased by the Treasury is imported from other countries, Mr. Eccles' recommendation that foreign buying be discontinued would involve virtual abandonment of our present silver policy. It would relieve the Treasury of the necessity of acquiring huge amounts of a metal not acceptable to foreign governments or central banks in settlement of balances. It would put an end to a policy which enables foreigners to dump great quantities of overvalued silver into this country in exchange for American goods.

While there is not now and never was any justification for singling out the domestic silver industry for preferential treatment, it is probably expedient to make some concessions to domestic producers who have become accustomed to rely upon the subsidies handed out to them by an indulgent Government. Consequently Mr. Eccles, instead of urging complete repeal of the silver program, recommends retention of the domestic subsidy at a reduced rate and placement of an embargo upon further imports. That appears to be a sensible compromise which, for all practical purposes, would terminate a foolish and futile experiment.

To Merge PWA And WPA

Next week the Senate will begin debate on a bill providing for consolidation under a single head of the various work-relief agencies, including also the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture and the public buildings branch of the Treasury's Procurement Division.

The measure is the outcome of prolonged study and extended hearings conducted by the special committee on unemployment and relief, headed by Senator Byrnes. Its underlying purpose is to reorganize and co-ordinate the activities of the PWA and WPA which, as the Byrnes committee says, have "wittingly or unwittingly been in competition with each other in making grants for projects." Increased economy as well as increased efficiency is the objective of the contemplated merger.

The proposal now before the Senate deals with only one phase of the program recommended by its special committee, which also calls for liberalization of unemployment insurance laws and more generous provision for the unemployable and the handicapped.

As originally drafted, the Byrnes bill carried extensive amendments to the social security act. Temporarily these have been dropped as a result of protests from the House Ways and Means Committee. Presumably they will be considered later, following action by the House. For the theory on which Senator Byrnes is working is that adequate unemployment insurance is the first line, and a consolidated public works program the second line, of scientific defense against unemployment.

The funds of the proposed consolidated public works agency are to be used solely for the purpose of subsidizing State and local projects. Furthermore, at least one-third the total cost of all projects in any State must be assumed by that State and its political subdivisions. While no ban is imposed upon white-collar projects, which have been the target of sharp attack, insistence upon substantial contributions by local governments should act as a decided check upon wasteful utilization of work-relief funds.

During the past year, according to official estimates, the average contribution of the local governments to WPA projects was only 17 per cent—or about half the amount that under the new proposal would be exacted on the average for all the projects within a single State. On the other hand, the PWA expects the local government to contribute 55 per cent of the cost of projects for which it makes grants—much more than the 33 1-3 per cent required by the proposed law.

The proposal to allocate work-relief funds among the States, according to a formula based on population and the number of locally unemployed, has the significant purpose of limiting the enormous discretionary powers now exercised by the Federal authorities. Even the minority members of the committee, who desire a different kind of arrangement, admit that any formula is "far better" than no formula at all.

Undoubtedly, a single agency should be able to function more effectively and more economically than the existing uncoordinated organizations engaged in providing work for the unemployed. The Byrnes bill would leave administration of work relief in the hands of the Federal authorities. But it emphasizes State and local responsibility for care of the needy by exacting substantial contributions from State and local governments.

Eventually it is to be hoped that the Federal Government will withdraw entirely from direct administration of relief, limiting its participation to grants-in-aid. But progress toward this goal will doubtless have to be achieved by stages. The Byrnes bill points in the right direction.

Copyright Convention

In urging early approval of the convention for the protection of copyright, now on the Senate executive calendar, Secretary Hull took occasion to point out that this treaty is a definite part of the step-by-step program of improving international relations in general.

"I am convinced," he said, "that thus to take advantage of opportunities for the betterment of details is a particularly appropriate way for democratic peoples to make their influence effective, and that, in a world torn by destructive efforts, we should let pass no occasion which offers a chance of constructive results."

These words express an important truth. At a time when the principle of international co-operation is being honored more in the breach than the observance, it is the more desirable for the United States and like-minded nations to concentrate on making that principle a reality in all matters clearly desirable in the national interest.

The treaty in question has long been needed on its own merits and for its own immediate objectives. Piracy of American literary and artistic works is increasing in other countries by leaps and bounds. Piracy of works from other lands has by no means disappeared here.

The copyright treaty has failed to be considered by the Senate on past occasions primarily because of high-powered pressure from special interests. Clearly this is no time to accept without questioning the activities of lobbyists willing to place the narrow self-interest of their organizations above any item in the structure of better world relations.

Bedfellows Again

Diplomacy makes strange bedfellows. Not the least striking result of Hitler's annexation of Czecho-Slovakia, and Mussolini's assault on Albania, has been to draw Great Britain and Russia closer together, even though these countries remain worlds apart in their respective ideologies.

It is certain that Premier Chamberlain and the members of the Conservative Party have lost nothing of their dislike of communism. They continue to be as hostile to that creed as ever. But their attitude toward Russia as a nation is undergoing fundamental change as a consequence of recent European developments.

In the field of high politics national friendships, like royal marriages, are formed out of considerations of common political interests. Nations become allies not because they naturally like each other, or because their governmental and economic systems are alike, but because there is some overriding practical advantage to be gained by such co-operation. In particular, nations are drawn together because they both fear some third power.

This explains not only the present but also past mutations in Anglo-Russian relations. During most of the nineteenth century, for instance, Great Britain regarded Czarist Russia as an almost hereditary enemy. Russia, in Kipling's striking phrase, was "The Bear That Walks Like a Man." And as late as 1902 Great Britain made an alliance with Japan for the primary purpose of barring further Russian expansion in the Far East. Yet five years later the Anglo-Russian entente, paralleling the Anglo-French entente, came into being.

The explanation is that between 1902 and 1907 the hostility which Great Britain and Russia formerly felt toward each other was overshadowed by a common fear of Germany. Because of Russia's defeat at the hands of Japan, Great Britain had no longer to fear any further thrusts by the Czar's troops in the direction of British interests in the East. On the other hand, Germany's naval expansion, her drive to the East in the form of the Berlin-Bagdad railway project and her increasingly serious trade challenge to Great Britain, combined to make the British fearful.

In British eyes, Germany has now again become the power which most seriously threatens the safety of the empire. This overshadows the dislike of Russia. On the other hand, Germany's expansion to the East constitutes a real danger to the Soviet state, fully appreciated in Moscow.

It was Pierre Laval, one of the most conservative of French statesmen, who made the French alliance with Russia. It is Neville Chamberlain, who as recently as last September sought earnestly to co-operate with Germany and Italy to the exclusion of Russia, who is now seeking to bring Russia into the antiaggression camp.

The paradox is more apparent than real. Politics, as someone has said, is the art of the possible. Co-operation between Great Britain and France, on the one hand, and the axis powers, on the other, has proved a vain illusion. That is why both London and Paris are turning to Moscow, hoping that the addition of Russia will create an effective barrier to further German aggressions.

Preparing For A Test

The long-awaited decision in the Strecker case left the status of Harry Bridges as uncertain as ever. Hence Secretary Perkins has ordered the Immigration Service to proceed with hearings in the Bridges case, as there is no longer any reason for delay. If the charge that Mr. Bridges is a Communist should be sustained, the Supreme Court will scarcely be able to avoid facing an issue which it sidestepped in the Strecker case by holding that past membership in the Communist Party constituted no ground for deportation.

The deportation act is designed to rid this country of aliens who favor overthrow of the United States Government by force or violence. It does not ban Communists specifically. The question that calls for an answer, therefore, is whether the Court regards a Communist as a foe of established institutions, deportable as a matter of course. If the Bridges case should fail to provide a test of this issue the need for clarification of the deportation law, already made necessary by the Strecker decision, will become even more pressing.

Banquo's Ghost

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of April 16, under the caption, "Keep Out War," we find a letter full of errors. Some of them are harmless, others are dangerous and have been exploded a hundred times. But like Banquo's ghost they keep popping up.

Italy did not double-cross Germany during the World War. In 1913 the German leaders sounded Giolitti as to whether he would keep up his end of the Triple Alliance if, and when, they translated "Der Tag" (which they had toasted a million times) into action. Giolitti had the courage to tell them that they knew that the Triple Alliance had been formed for defensive purposes only. He warned them further against embarking on what might "prove to be a very dangerous adventure." And, as it turned out, he spoke prophetically.

In 1914 the Germans announced their aims: Weltmacht oder Niedergang. World power or downfall. By all the rules of the game they are very poor losers. Hitler's mind works in reverse logic, and his memory is conveniently synchronized to it. To read his tirades is sheer waste of time.

"Finally," says T. J. B., "we played the sap." As another contributor points out in an adjoining column, the English navy stood between us and the Holy Alliance. It stood between us and the meddlesome Admiral Friedriechs at Manila when Dewey was goaded into uncomplimentary remarks. The British accepted the Monroe Doctrine when Bismarck dubbed it an international impertinence, and their navy passively helped us to enforce it. When, in 1896, honest Grover Cleveland waxed truculent and flung an unwarranted challenge, that navy could have wiped us off the sea. England quietly ignored the challenge. H. de JERSEY.

Hitler Won't Attack

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will Hitler order his Germans to attack the Poles? That is now the most important question for the greater part of Europe to consider. And the answer is "No!" There are too many difficulties standing in the way of the German dictator for him to seek that solution.

In a war Hitler's cohorts would fail to win for him what he could get very easily by bluff and negotiation.

If he went to war over Poland, he would be fighting on two fronts against four and possibly five nations. He would embark on that adventure without adequate stocks of raw materials and without sufficient food to supply his people.

A decision to go to war would mean the end of Hitlerism, defeat for Germany, bankruptcy in Europe, and the crucifixion of mankind. TROUP HOWARD.

Hitler's Dream

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This writer believes that Hitler's fondest dream is the acquisition of Danzig and the Polish Corridor. He'd almost swap Austria for it and throw in that imponderable, his immortal soul. Since 100 years before Hitler was born the Corridor has been striven for as an outlet to the sea. The old Germany and Austria have boasted some of Europe's greatest rulers. Some of them took a tilt at the Corridor, though inspired not so much by the spirit of aggressive conquest as to win out to a place in the sun. If war comes, this seasoned troublemaker, the Polish Corridor, is apt to figure in the distribution of the spoils and Hitler, the gambler, would go his whole pile for it.

Secretary of Peace

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As we laymen review the unprecedented acts of modern diplomacy we are urged to ask: Toward what goal are our leaders heading? To gain time seems to be the answer. President Roosevelt in his dramatic appeal to the rulers of the world asks for a 10-year armistice in which to work out a satisfactory formula for the solution of our difficulties.

I believe that we can best utilize the new lease on life gained through these precious moments of delay by establishing secretaries of peace in the cabinets of our governments. A secretary of peace in government would not mean that we do not have need for a Secretary of War, but it would mean that we are putting in more efforts to establish peace on a permanent basis. A secretary of peace would not have to do with wishful pacifism but with neo-pacifism, which involves constructive working for peace by eradicating the fundamental causes of war.

This peace officer could launch an extensive educational program stressing international equality and fair-mindedness. He could establish schools for peace and character education, peace libraries, peace scout groups of young people, peace contests, etc., all with the purpose of instilling a permanent peace consciousness in the minds of men.

He could establish national academies, similar to our naval and military academies where statesmen could be trained in the art of peacecraft. These statesmen could be sent to various countries as goodwill ambassadors, to lay the foundation for a world conference to be held as soon as possible. Such an office as the secretary of peace would have the backing and confidence of a majority of peace-loving men and women, since it would be biocratic in nature, that is, interested in granting a fuller life to the citizenry. Helping Dictators?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a London evening paper two nights ago, the Evening Standard, there was printed from your paper, or purporting to be from your paper, an expressed doubt as to whether England and France together could beat Germany and Italy in war. Surely, surely it is unwise in any way to help the villainies of the two dictators, as such an opinion must do?

We know they feel they can win against Right by Might; they tell their people so, and have got them almost minded to make the effort. But never let it be said in the tongue that Milton spoke that Might will triumph over Right. To aid the dictators is not, I know, your desire. Rather say to us, your kin:

And how can man die better, than facing fearful odds,
For the ashes of his fathers and the temples of his gods.

If America cannot tell the dictators that aggression against peaceful democracies will be resisted by America, will your great country aid us by taking on Japan's navy which will surely be unleashed against the Eastern possessions of Great Britian, to help which would mean detailing hardly-to-be-spared warships of France and England? America has a battle fleet; we have not. AGNES HERBERT.

Hitler Frustrated

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just received a letter from a relative of mine in Germany, who was sent through the mails from the United States a play, "Knights in Armor," which pictured an imaginary dictator of Mars—obviously meant to be Hitler—as less than a man. He is definitely a psychopath.

In one place it is said of Hitler, "Our Cato is the child of monstrous frustrations. The lives of most of our people have been overshadowed by frustrations—intellectuals in idleness, dreamers made robots, youth shackled with old dependents, patriots wounded by defeat. Ftustrations—millions and millions of frustrations . . . The power of Cato lies in his unbalanced nature. Balance his nature with love—should he by chance experience it now—and I do verily fear that you and I shall shortly be pulled down by an infuriated mob. The voice—for all the little men who cry for greatness—is our Cato. We dare not dull the edge of his frustration which is the cutting strength of our power."

This speech is made by the fictitious character who represents Frau Wagner. They are trying to keep Hitler from marrying in order to get away from the slogan of the underground movement, "Hitler, less than a man." Cato is the name for Hitler in the play.

The play is evidently causing considerable comment behind the lines in Germany. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of copies must have been sent into Germany, according to this friend. All of his Nazi friends (leading Nazis in his town) received copies. They are impressed with the position taken by the play but resent our interference with their internal affairs.

Because he had this letter sent to me from Switzerland I dare not risk answering him as I would like to answer him. All I can do is to call this dialogue to the attention of my friends in this country and say that it seems to me to represent one of the best explanations of the situation in Germany. The true liberators of Germany will be those who understand that it has been a nation of frustrations and that these frustrations must be resolved.

Obviously the cause of liberty requires that Hitler be opposed and defeated. The question is: Can the Tory rulers of England and France and their puppets (not democracies) on the continent be trusted to wage an effective war against this chief victim of the frustrations which they were largely responsible for creating at and after Versailles?

Would not a much better way be the way of an international conference organized by governments of France, England and the United States, pledged in advance to put their colonial possessions under international mandates and to give free access to all nations? Chamberlain's government and Daladier's government will never do this. Will ours under Roosevelt? There are ways of getting such a peace and justice plea to the German masses, and Hitler, who would not go along with such a plan, would face a revolution at home.

RUDOLPH SCHUMANN.

Wrong Overture?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Philosophy and diplomacy, where art thou? After ridiculing and condemning a nation or an individual, or both, then approaching with an appeal for consideration of a change of policies of both—what a ridiculous overture!

Not that the condemnation was not justified in the premises. Wise men know better.

The Post Impressionist

Peter Rye Eats Fish

EVER SINCE my birthday, when a piece of mine on book dedications was printed in this column, that subject has been reasserting itself. At first I wondered whether it was not, as those close to me pointedly hinted, a topic distinguished by its unimportance, except perhaps to bookworms and eremites. Then various persons unintentionally reassured me by referring me to their favorite dedications—a few of them real honeys—that I had missed in my rather desultory researches. (After all, the potential field is pretty wide.) Though some of these turned out to be not dedications at all, but prefaces, acknowledgements and whatnot, they were nonetheless interesting. There is Charles Morrow Wilson's book "Roots of America," for instance, wherein in a special paragraph, along with some rather perfunctory gratitude to his publishers, he expresses his "deepest appreciation toward the identical twin kittens, Ug and Glug, who have refrained from pillaging or pilfering the manuscript of this book."

To aid my bibliographic propensities one man presented me with a copy of No. 39 of the Harvard Classics, entitled "Prefaces and Prologues to Famous Books" and representing the work of some distinguished prefacers—William Caxton, John Calvin, John Knox, Edmund Spenser, Francis Bacon, Samuel Johnson, William Wordsworth, Walt Whitman et al. Judged from this very handy anthology, preface writing was evidently a ponderous art.

In an old book called "Miscellanies of Literature," I read this about the preface: "It argues a deficiency in taste to turn over an elaborate preface unread; for it is the attar of the author's roses; every drop distilled at an immense cost. It is the reason of the reasoning and the folly of the foolish." This anonymous commentator goes on to observe, however, that "a prefacer is generally a most accomplished liar. The insincerity of prefaces arises whenever an author would disguise his solicitude for his work by appearing negligent and even undesirous of its success."

Strange enough, the prefaces of the humorist are often the most genuine. Turn if you will to some of Mark Twain's prefaces, or to Stephen Leacock's. Or marvel at the disarming forthrightness of this prefatory note by Bert Leston Taylor to his book "A Line-o'-Verse or Two;" "One reason for rounding up this fugitive verse and prisoning it between covers was this: Frequently—more or less—I receive a request for a copy of this jingle or that and it is easier to mention a publishing house than to search through ancient and dusty files. The other reason was that I wanted to."

And we may feel sure that Bill Nye was quite sincere when he prefaced his book, "A Guest at the Ludlow," as follows:

Go, little booklet, go,
Bearing an honored name,
Till everywhere that you have went They're glad that you have came.

But to return once more to that kindred article of insincerity, the dedication, I must pass along a letter that I received from my friend John M. Leonard, the bookseller:

"I thought it might interest you to know that I ran across a book dedicated, very strange to say, to me. It was a very agreeable surprise, and what I can not understand is just why the author did not send me an autographed copy of the book, since he felt so pleased to flatter me with its dedication, or just why some friend had not informed me of how I had been so greatly honored.

"There is, however, a hint printed on the jacket of the book that explains the author's attitude toward friends. It is in regard to the cost of the book, to wit—'Price: To the Personal Friends of the Author, $1. To the Public Generally, 50 cents.' That, I guess, explains many things and perhaps why I did not receive a copy of the book.

"The title of the volume is 'Our Distinguished Fellow Citizens.' The author is Carlton McCarthy, and his dedication, though not mentioning my name, was nevertheless so pointedly directed to me as to leave little doubt who was meant. This is how it reads:

'This volume is lovingly dedicated to all who are doomed to live, and to die, without being at all distinguished and who do not propose to be distressed about it.

"I have never met Mr. McCarthy, and I wondered how he seemed to know me so well; how he knew I was to live, that I am to die, that I was not to be distinguished. And how in hell did he ever know that I was not to be distressed by it all? For that is one thing I have kept to myself and have never told or breathed it to any man above a whisper. Had it not been for your essay in The Post calling my attention to book dedications it is doubtful whether I ever would have discovered Mr. McCarthy's epigraph dedicating to me—to me, let me repeat—that book now dear to my heart, 'Our Distinguished Fellow Citizens.' And so, I thank you."

If John's letter proves anything it is that he and I have an inexplicable fondness for a good dedication and a sincere preface. I wonder if his first introduction to the word "dedicate" was, as mine was, in Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, and if he remembers back to a time, as I can, when the word "preface" conveyed a rather nebulous meaning but when printed boldly in a primer or speller furnished a most substantial spine for that old double acrostic—going and coming—"Peter Rye Eats Fish and Catches Eagles—Eagles Catch Alligators, Father Eats Raw Potatoes."

American Sea Power

By Hulbert Footner

Some Naval History

TWO NEW BOOKS—"The Rise of American Naval Power," by Harold and Margaret Sprout (Princeton University Press, $3), and James B. Connolly's "Navy Men" (John Day, $3.75)—are as different as books could be yet each supplies an admirable complement to the other.

The Sprout book undertakes to tell the story of our Navy in terms of secretaries of the Navy, acts of Congress and theories of Naval strategy. The authors courageously eschew all such extraneous matters as the description of individual ships and naval actions. Their concern is with the ideas that governed the building and the operation of our Navy from its earliest beginnings down to the Great War. At the start it makes pretty heavy going for the light-minded reader, but such is the honesty and the sweet reasonableness of the authors that they get you in the end. They have produced a solid and useful book that nobody with any interest in naval affairs can afford to overlook. A second volume is promised to bring the story down to date.

HERE IS a grim story of what happened during the Revolution and the War of 1812, a story not at all flattering to the national vanity. Whenever one reads the truth about those times one marvels that the young republic survived at all. Ignorance was our bane as a people, nobody knew how to run things except a few of the fathers. They differed among themselves, and they were rarely listened to by Congress anyhow.

Besides ignorance we had from the very beginning that ugly sectionalism to contend with that is troubling us still. It was impossible to get the backwoods Congressmen to vote for ships, yet it was those same Congressmen who voted for war with England in 1812 when we were practically without ships.

We failed to learn the lesson that 1812-15 could have taught us, and for many years afterwards, in fact down to the Civil War, the story of the Navy is a miserable record of dunderheadedness on the part of all concerned. The engagement between the Monitor and the Merrimac (properly Virginia) was far from being the glorious affair that we used to think. Everybody but us had learned about ironclads years before. The country at large was not interested in a Navy, and the admirals fought tooth and nail against the introduction of steam, iron hulls, rifled guns and explosive shells.

WILLIAM C. WHITNEY who was Grover Cleveland's first secretary of the Navy, is usually credited with being the first to introduce modern ideas to our Navy, but these authors go a little further back, and name William H. Hunt, of Louisiana, Garfield's secretary, as the man who introduced the sorely needed reforms. Garfield was killed and Hunt resigned, but President Arthur found another able Secretary of the Navy in William E. Chandler, of New Hampshire. During Whitney's term of office which followed, the "White Squadron" went into commission. President Harrison appointed Benjamin F. Tracy to head the Navy Department whom these authors term "a man of marked ability and initiative." Thus we got four energetic Secretaries in a row and the new era began.

The next great factor was Capt. Alfred T. Mahan whose various books dealing with the influence of sea power on history made the country Navy-conscious at last. And presently there turned up in the Navy Department the man of men to put Mahan's ideas into effect; to wit: Theodore Roosevelt. Though he was only Assistant Secretary, he made things hum. One gathers that he was a pain in the neck to easy-going Secretary Long.

The authors' point of view wobbles here. They are alternately praising Roosevelt and viewing him with alarm. It is inevitable. Not enough time has yet passed for us to get a steady focus on the phenomenal T. R. He created our Navy as we know it. In and out of season he insisted that we must become a great naval power and we have. Yet he hated going to sea.

SO MUCH for theory. Jim Connolly, whom everybody knows as the historian of the Gloucester fishermen and other seafarers, writes about life in the Navy. His experience of our ships covers a period of 35 years; and he has summed up many voyages in this volume.

Theodore Roosevelt comes into his story, too; indeed T. R. could not be kept out of anything that happened while he was around. He was Jim Connolly's friend and patron. He invited the young author to write up the Navy. There are pleasant intimate glimpses of T. R. Again we learn that he hated going to sea. Climbing a perpendicular ship's ladder he said to Jim: "Good exercise when a man is getting old and fat." His loyal admirer points out that he was bulky, but neither old nor fat.

On several occasions Connolly was permitted to "buy in" on the officers mess of a warship; at another time he enlisted as a yeoman for a brief period (this is one of the best parts); he has "put in weeks, sometimes months on end, with every kind of Navy craft except repair ships, plane carriers and honey barges." He made a part of the famous world cruise of Theodore Roosevelt's battle fleet 30 years ago.

He tells of it all in an unpretentious and intimate fashion. He is a friendly man who made good alike with gobs, petty officers, admirals and Presidents. The result is a series of wonderfully graphic pictures of life in our Navy; its unique mixture an unnatural formality and an extreme informality. Sometimes the author becomes a little too degage for the reader's comfort. He who writes colloquially must watch his colloquialisms for the freshly minted slang phrase soon becomes the tiresome cliche.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Senator Taft on Ballyhoo

ACCORDING to Senator Taft the concern shown by the President over the danger of a world war is "ballyhoo" to divert the attention of the people from the failures of the New Deal. The Senator, who is a leading candidate for the Republican nomination, made this charge at an official dinner of his party. It is really a very serious accusation. Made by a Senator with Mr. Taft's responsibility, it is just about the most serious accusation that it would be possible to make at this time.

If it is true that the President of the United States is playing politics with the question of war and peace, if he is inventing, imagining, or exaggerating the seriousness of the danger, then he is guilty of an unpardonable thing. If Mr. Taft is right that the danger is just ballyhoo, he ought to do something more about the situation than talk casually about it at a partisan dinner. He ought to produce the evidence which causes him to say what he is saying. He will have a receptive audience. Anyone who can prove, or even make a good case, that there is no need to take very seriously what seems to be happening abroad will help millions to sleep better at night.

President's Office Deserves Respect

BUT IF MR. TAFT cannot do that, then he should consider whether it is fitting for a Senator of the United States to impugn the honor and to seek to destroy the influence of the President of the United States. There is a respect due to the office of the President, and a proper respect for that office requires that an accusation like Mr. Taft's should not be made unless it can be substantiated.

Mr. Taft might, perhaps, occupy the office of President some day. If he does, he will expect his political opponents to measure their words when they are talking about issues that are of vital concern to the Nation as a whole. He will expect his opponents to assume, however much they differ with him on specific measures, that he will not prostitute the office of President.

For he will realize that if the people cannot rely upon the good faith of the President, even when they disagree with his policies, orderly government becomes impossible. Mr. Taft must know that. He must know that if everyone in public life is going to go about casually accusing everyone else of acting on the basest motive, then public discussion will become sheer bedlam. If a man whose father has been President and Chief Justice, who is himself a Senator, is to set an example of this sort, to what level will political debate be dragged by men who have had none of Mr. Taft's opportunities for learning the rules of fair debate?

Roosevelt Not Alone In Fears Of War

ON THE MERITS of the question of how great is the danger which is threatening there is, of course, ground for legitimate difference of opinion. It is arguable that the world war will not take place. It is arguable that if it does, it will not have vital consequences for the United States. But Mr. Taft cannot argue that the President and Mr. Hull and his other advisers stand alone in thinking that there may be a world war, and that it would affect greatly the United States. Too many people who are not New Dealers share this opinion to justify Mr. Taft in saying that the danger is being ballyhooed to cover up the failure of the New Deal.

If the danger is not a real one, what on earth are we to make, for example, of the whole behavior of Mr. Chamberlain? Are we to suppose that all this feverish arming in Great Britain, this intense diplomatic activity, these movements of fleets and mobilization of armies, are all imaginary, or are not to be taken very seriously? If the danger is not real, if the condition of the outer world is something that we can complacently disregard, why did the Congress of the United States, with almost no dissent, vote our own great armament program?

Is it all ballyhoo? Is everyone mad? Is everyone having an hallucination? Does Mr. Taft have any knowledge, not now available to almost all the rest of mankind, which enables him to suggest so confidently that the whole situation is a manufactured scare?

Scientist Tells Of Making Salts Destroy Cancer

A technique for turning inexpensive salts into a form more powerful than radium, for use in destroying cancers, was described yesterday by Dr. George Speri Sperti before a group of scientists at Catholic University.

Dr. Sperti is a member of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences and director of the Institutum Devi Thomae, graduate school of scientific research, in Cincinnati, Ohio. His lecture was the second of a series in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Catholic University, and was sponsored by members of the scientific departments.

Dr. Sperti said the salts could be changed instantly from salts which are no more poisonous than ordinary table salt, and no more destructive, to substances powerful enough to attack cancer. He added that the work could not be used at present in actual cancer treatment.

The G.O.P. Candidate

By Mark Sullivan

Lure to Guessing

ON A DAY when grave matters press for thought, there is, in the morning mail, material for a smile. It comes in the form of a postal card containing a cryptic message—the postal I assume was sent to newspapers and writers generally. It is what in some circles is called a "teaser." It creates the excitment of anticipation and suspense. It promises to reveal something later. It tells us that we will receive, next week, the name of the "logical Republican candidate for President."

Meanwhile, the postal card received today lists the qualifications which the Republican candidate for President should have—qualifications which, of course, are possessed by the paragon whose name will be revealed to us next week.

The thing lures to speculation. It starts one guessing. One goes over this list of qualifications to see who it can be that lives up to it.

Qualification No. 1, is "honesty and courage."

There is no clew in that. All the candidates will possess honesty and courage—or at least their advocates will not admit that they do not. They will also love their wives and be kind to their children.

Must Be Acceptable To Every U. S. Group

QUALIFICATION No. 2: "Acceptable to labor, agriculture and industry."

No clew there, either. They will be acceptable to labor, agriculture and industry—and also, presumably, to the church, the bar, the medical profession, the Elks, the Odd Fellows and the Salvation Army.

Qualification No. 3: "Experience in State government administration."

Now we have a clew. The paragon whose name we are to be given next week has had experience in State government. Presumably he has been or is a Governor of a State. We run over the list of Republican Governors to see who among them will fit the other qualifications. One qualification is—

"5. Experience with national problems through holding national office."

So now we must seek someone who has been or is a Governor, and also holds or has held a national office. "National office" presumably means national elective office, and that must mean service in Congress.

Youth Appeal Deemed Necessary

OF THE QUALIFICATIONS, several are general. They would apply to, or would be claimed by, anyone aspiring to be a Presidential nominee of either party at any time. They include:

"4. Record for sound financial administration."

No clew there. Everybody in office claims a record for sound financial administration. Mr. Roosevelt claims it. If he can, can't anybody?

"6. Record for sponsoring progressive legislation."

Absolutely no clew there. Everybody sponsors progressive legislation. There is no such thing as unprogressive legislation. A man who would admit sponsoring unprogressive legislation would never try for any office.

"7. Youth appeal."

That is some help. The paragon is, let us say, under 50. Or is 50 too senile to appeal to youth? Had we better say under 45?

"8. Humble heritage."

That helps some. It eliminates several. It could not be Gov. Vanderbilt of Rhode Island—he was born rich. Nor Gov. Saltonstall of Massachusetts—he was born of a distinguished old family within the inmost Brahmanate of New England. Anyhow, those two are eliminated by one of the other specifications. They have never held any national office.

Gov. Hoffman Seems To Fit That Picture

"9. Radio appeal and ability to meet people and win warm response."

That sounds like Dale Carnegie or Maj. Bowes. But of course they're out—they are not in politics. There isn't much help in this. The specification is too general. Everybody in politics is supposed to have radio appeal, even if he has a voice like a guinea hen and pronunciation like a London cockney. And nobody will admit that he lacks ability to meet people and with warm response.

"10. Freedom from employment by, or connection, with, Wall Street or Big Business."

That doesn't help any. Nobody in politics in either party admits ever having worked in a bank or swept out a Wall street office.

Those, ladies and gentlemen, are the qualifications of the paragon who is going to be put forward for the Republican Presidential nomination next week. Detaching the qualifications that provide such clew, he is going to be: A Governor or former Governor, who has been in Congress, who is under 50, and who was born in the modern equivalent of a log cabin.

Can you guess who it will be? For myself, lured by the fascination of guessing, I have gone over the possibilities who fulfill these specifications and have not yet been mentioned. My conclusion is that we shall see next week a boom launched for former Gov. Harold Hoffman of New Jersey. If the mysterious Mr. X. turns out to be someone different, I shall apologize to Mr. Hoffman, if he wants me to.

Hare & Tortoise

By Barnet Nover

The Axis And Its Rivals

IN COMPARISON with the way in which the totalitarian powers usually move, the British effort to create an antiaggression bloc appears to be an exercise in slow motion.

Austria's independence was destroyed in four days. Czecho-Slovakia disappeared in little more than a week-end. Albania was conquered almost between sunrise and sunset.

There has been no similar speed on the other side. After five weeks the "stop Hitler" movement so dramatically inaugurated by Mr. Chamberlain in his Birmingham speech is still in its formative stage. The wall which the British premier hopes to build with the help of France and of the small nations in the path of the steamroller is still full of gaps through which Hitler and Mussolini can ride with ease.

JUST THE SAME, it would be a mistake to underestimate what the antiaxis powers headed by Great Britain have done in the way of creating a new balance of power in Europe. If the job is still incomplete it nevertheless represents an impressive accomplishment in view of the enormous difficulties that stood in the way.

These accomplishments fall into two categories, one negative and the other positive. On the negative side is the fact that Britain's revolutionary change of policy has halted the disintegration, temporary though that may be, of eastern and southeastern Europe.

After Prague, the nations in that part of the world had no alternative but to make what terms they could with the all-conquering axis in the hope that in so doing some little shred of their independence would still be left to them. In view of what had happened to Czecho-Slovakia, this hope was frail, indeed. But since the only alternative to capitulation was resistance in the face of hopeless odds, there was a real possibility that the little nations would capitulate.

IN THIS PARTICULAR Britain's act of leadership has turned the tide. Poland and Rumania may be dubious as to the nature and extent of the assistance which Great Britain and France are in a position to give them. But any help is better than none. And British and French help might prove decisive in the long run.

On the positive side British action has also been of considerable value. It has tended to create a counter-weight to the axis of considerable potential size and dimensions. Given time the British bloc which now consists of Great Britain, France, Poland, Rumania and Greece may be strengthened by the addition of Turkey, Russia and the Baltic states. The fact that Moscow is reported to have offered to join Great Britain and France in a tripartite alliance is an important straw in the wind.

IF ANYTHING were needed to show that Great Britain means business it is the fact that since March 15 a strenuous effort has been made to find means to bring Russia into the antiaxis grouping.

It is obvious that Russia alone could provide the manpower and material needed by the nations to the east of the Third Reich effectively to bar the way to further Nazi aggressions. Reports from Moscow have indicated that Russia has been willing to supply that assistance provided that she were asked to do so by her immediate neighbors, namely Poland and Rumania, and also provided that the anti-Hitler bloc be transformed into a real system of collective security.

Because of Polish and Rumanian unwillingness to have any Russian troops on their soil, this Russian proposal has so far got nowhere. The triple alliance plan that would bind Great Britain, France and Russia to a common program of defense thus represents a watering-down of the original Moscow idea. If adopted it would mean that the "stop Hitler" combination would consist of two concentric circles, the outer circle made up of the three antiaxis great powers of Europe and the inner circle of a set of unilateral guarantees extended to the little nations by Great Britain and France.

IN THE MEANTIME the British tortoise has been making progress, if slow progress, in adjusting the United Kingdom itself to the exigencies of the present situation. The rearmament program is being stepped up as fast as possible and this week the Chamberlain government created a ministry of supply which such men as Winston Churchill have long urged. And while the London government has steadily fought off conscription, which an increasing number of Englishmen view as an inescapable need, unpleasant though it may be, steps in that direction have also been taken.

Whatever may ultimately become of it, President Roosevelt's dramatic message to Hitler and Mussolini helped the European democracies and their allies by giving them additional time to carry through their plans and by temporarily taking the initiative away from the axis powers.

In Aesop's fable the tortoise won because the hare, though decidedly fleeter, took a nap. Nothing like that can be hoped for from the axis powers, which have always been alert to every opportunity to push forward. But the fact that the axis hare has run up against unexpected obstacles has undoubtedly reduced the distance between it and the democratic tortoise.

Lovette declared: "We of the armed services have highly valued your efforts to emphasize the blessings of a government by democratic processes, with the need for adequate defense to protect our policies and possessions."

Like other speakers at the congress, he stressed the defense obligation which the United States "owes to Latin America" and urged that young Americans be "given an adequate comprehension of the four great freedoms of our system—the freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of press, and freedom of public assembly."

D. A. R. delegates voted to support legislation requiring registration with the State Department of organizations "carrying on within the United States propaganda inimical to democracy." Annual reports of the groups should also be filed, it was voted.

"All constructive efforts for peace in the world" were praised in an additional resolution, which asked that vigilance and devotion to freedom be added to "work for international good will and respect."

WPA Survey Praised

Plans to issue a memorial postage stamp in honor of the centenary of the birth of Frances E. Willard, a charter D. A. R. member, were praised, and the week of June 8-14 designated as Flag Week.

The WPA was commended for its historical records survey projects, and continuance of the work asked.

Declaring "Trees," by Joyce Kilmer, had been "impractical" as a theme song with which to open and close D. A. R. radio programs, the society voted to discontinue its official use.

Breaches of the flag etiquette are watched closely by D. A. R. chapters, Mrs. Charles Blackwell Keesee, of Virginia, chairman of the correct use of the flag committee, declared in her report. One chapter, she said, found a Massachusetts department store selling "O, say can you see?" dresses.

Claudine Hutter, chairman of the student loan fund committee, also of Virginia, reported that the D. A. R. has aided 3,476 students by making loans from a fund that now amounts to $360,882.56.

Other annual reports were made on the closing day by Mrs. Joseph Pryor, chairman of the committee on insignia; Mrs. Samuel James Campbell, chairman of the approved schools committee, and Ruth Bradley Sheldon, chairman of the Caroline E. Holt scholarship fund committee.

Mrs. Elmer E. Woollen was chairman of last night's banquet committee. She was assisted by Mrs Charles Carroll Haig, Mrs. Loyal R. Alden, Mrs. Ryland C. Bryant, Mrs. William A. Buckingham, Mrs. William Herring, Mrs. Orlando H. Kirk, Mrs. Eliot C. Lovett and Mrs. William E. Northam. The United States Marine Band Orchestra played.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Miami In April

Miami Beach, April 2—"What's Miami Beach like in April?" That's a query your correspondent often hears. Well, if you like it in January, February and March, you won't like it now. You listen to birds instead of racing tips, you admire the scenery instead of a greyhound, and you take time to note that the Gulf Stream is mightier than the racing chart.

Nobody hurries any more. The town takes on a sleepy, comfortable look. With the last day's racing at dog and horse tracks, the race addicts disappear overnight. It seems odd to get the evening papers and see no more racing charts, expert selections or headlines, "Gimpy Gus Takes Eighth."

Night clubs, restaurants, stores and the larger hotels, ablaze a day ago, are suddenly dark and boarded. Fishing gets good, you can park a car almost anywhere and practically nobody looks like a Public Enemy, except, perhaps, your correspondent.

Hialeah and Tropical become abandoned specimens of artistic landscaping. Two dollars now does the work of $2. The daily double, the quiniela, "Jack's Green Sheet," the evening radio theme song from the dog tracks and the groceryman's inclusion of a horse tip with the green vegetables are gone with the wind.

That wild, jittery, haunted look is no longer seen in the eyes of natives and visitors. Nights on Biscayne boulevard, Lincoln road and Collins avenue are so quiet you can hear a hotel rate drop.

Bathing is great and the beaches are uncrowded. The people who have the miseries if they aren't being publicized or photographed are missing. The social climbing season is closed. The consumption of cocktails they hate by people who can't stand 'em has dropped 10,000 gallons a week.

But there is news that would interest the folks back home. For one thing, a genuine battle against racing is on in the Legislature. The merchants' battle to make racing satisfy itself with a five-day week is on; a Senator's demand for a probe of Florida racing is being pushed and Legislators outside of Dade County are threatening to kill mutuel betting if a suit is pushed to test the constitutionality of a law under which all counties share in the racing revenue.

An official of Hialeah declared Hialeah would go out of business if the five-day week racing bill passed. "Let it go out of business," cried Miami merchants. But they don't mean it, of course. It's all done by mirrors.

Here's one for the book: Florida, after being free of slot machines for two years, now may fill the State with them under State operation. A bill is before the Legislature to have the State own and distribute the slot machines, getting the rake-off to help pay State expenses!

It limits them (don't laugh) to 15 machines to any one restaurant, night club, drug store, etc., and (wait now; you'll die over this one) specifies that they must not be installed within 300 feet of schools and churches EXCEPT IN CITIES!

What's Florida like in April? It's like that.

For Dictators

Power now has a toppling sound.
Persecution and the flame
Of greed have made the word unsound,
Changed it to a veiled name

For fear and for uncertainty,
And the ignorant misuse
Of justice marked it uglily
With the stigma of abuse.

Power now has a sound that rocks,
It will make a crashing noise,
Like the falling towers of blocks
Built by very little boys.
—Gertrude Callaghan.

P. F. G. insists he heard a beautiful creature at Palm Beach this winter singing, "My Yacht Belongs to Daddy."

Warning To United States

Drop the shutters,
Bar the doors,
Strengthen all the Walls and floors!
Rush to shelter—
Make it fast! . . .
Hitler plans an April blast!

Morris Gest is to have a "colossal exhibit of midgets" at the New York World's Fair. A lot of people were afraid of something like that all along.

This ride of Denys Wortman, cartoonist, in the role of George Washington, has some people all mixed up. They keep wondering how Washington ever got his cartoons ahead far enough for him to cross the Delaware and whether Wortman really fooled Cornwallis by keeping those fires going.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay.

Career Woman's Dilemma

I.
How can I be a woman of charm,
With gentle grace and ways that disarm,
And hold my own in the office babel,
Where men colleagues rant and pound the table?

II.
How can I sweetness and light exude,
And also be wily and clever and shrewd?
How can I stay soft as a mold of jello,
And keep trying to beat the other fellow?

III.
How can I hold back the retort that will blister,
And not be known as a poor, weak sister?
Now don't advise me to be "sweet, but firm,"
That kind of woman makes everyone squirm.

IV.
How can I lend a helping hand,
With womanly grace and manner bland,
And not spell all the words and enlighten the hazy,
And do all the work of the mentally lazy?

V.
How can I give visitors cordial greeting,
As a lady should—when time is fleeting,
And the moment chosen most opportune,
But if I don't, I'll be called a sour old prune?

VI.
How can I engage in any dispute,
No matter how mild, or how minute,
With another woman and not have men say:
"A couple of cats—each wanting her way?"

VII.
How can I avoid having to acquiesce
And then be known as one who says "Yes,"
For if I say "No" as firm as I can,
I'm a "difficult" woman—they should have hired a man.

VIII.
How can I be properly aggressive
In a world where the fight is most oppressive,
And carry on the feminine tradition
Of kindness, warmth, gentle intuition?

IX.
How can I keep fresh as a flower in bloom,
And not spend all my time in the "ladies' room?"
Or take proper measures about my beauty,
And at my desk never shirk my duty?

X.
It all comes down in the last analysis
To the problem of being a human antithesis,
Now, how can I cultivate sex appeal,
And also carry on my job with zeal?"

Silver Mesh Snood

Hollywood, Calif.—Jane Bryan, movie actress, accents a black crepe afternoon dress with a snood matching cuffs of silver mesh. She appears after dark in a white chiffon dress highlighted by snood and wide girdle crocheted of gold string and set off with sapphires.

Made for Each Other

Girls who demand new figures to match their new curvacious clothes will find here the answer to their problem. The invincible Schiaparelli created the step-in girdle (below) to go under form-revealing gowns such as the one Lana Turner, Hollywood starlet, wears. The "scissors silhouette" of Miss Turner's poppy-printed rhumba ruffled gown repeats the curves of the "scissors" foundation. Satin and rayon satin lastex make this high-waisted girdle

New Silhouette Is Designed From Scissons

Return of Waspish Waists and Low-Swung Hips Favored

By Marshall Adams.
The Post Fashion Editor.

OPEN a pair of scissors. See how they curve roundly at the top, taper into nothing at all in the middle then swing out into fullness at the base. Remind you of anything but a pair of scissors? If not, they soon will for the "scissors silhouette" is one of the most vital fashion influences of the season. It sets the pace for the figure you'll cut this season and next.

The idemon of the shears and tape measure, Schiaparelli, drew up the affinity between a pair of scissors and a woman's shadow-like waist line, her rounded bust-line and her long line of hips. As is Schiaparelli's custom, she borrowed her theme from the suavely upholstered figures of the past when waspish waists and low-swung hips were favored. This season's "little girl" look of candor, its sugary colors, pastel printed prints and difficult long-waisted frocks were made for each other — provided — underneath it all is the proper foundation control.

Front Lacing Revived

Schiaparelli didn't stop at adopting merely the silhouette theme of former years. She went further and actually revived the old-fashioned front lacings of whale bone corset days. She has used them judiciously for she combines them with lace, blushing pink satin and durable rayon lastex to create sleek-fitting foundations, as comfortable on the body as the whale boners were cruel.

The idea back of the front-laced girdles works on a can't fail system. Snug lacings cause the abdomen to remain flat and neat while waists are subdued to a mite-like smoothness. The new long line of hips is achieved by side and front panelling control.

Adored by Younger Set

Schiaparelli's girdle is designed with front lacings for youngsters, though she also has foundation farments for full blown figures. This girdle is called Pagan Charm and is, surprisingly enough, adored by members of the younger set. Even their supple young figures may need lacing support when they don the broadening checks and chevron stripes of the approaching summer.

Additional undercover news has just reached us by expert local corsetierres who advise buying brassieres by width as well as size. The reason is obvious. You may measure a perfect 36. Your daughter or sub-deb friend may have the same measurements, but identical brassieres won't do at all.

Balance Is Essential in a Kitchen Knife

By Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor.

THE KNIFE is one of the most important pieces of kitchen equipment, yet often it is given but little consideration. There are a few points to keep in mind when purchasing a kitchen knife. First in importance is the material in the blade. A forged knife usually gives low service and takes a superior cutting edge because forging develops a finer grain in the steel.

The shape of the blade is important too. A well-shaped knife blade tapers from the back toward the cutting edge and from the handle to the point. The knife handle should fit the user's hand comfortably. When choosing a knife, remember the material of the handle is important. A good blade will last years so the handle should not be short-lived.

How Conciliate Difference Between Gregarious Wife, Seclusive Husband? Or Can It Be Done?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: What are the possibilities of conciliating fundamental differences of character between husband and wife? After 20 years of marriage, my husband and I still clash on the same old differences. We are truly fond of each other, strive for mutual understanding and are hurt deeply when the usual harmony is upset—just like the majority of married couples, young or old.

My husband is the stronger character; socially the more valuable member of the partnership. Realizing that, I've been the one to yield to his superiority. At least, our life is arranged according to his plan. Of course, I'm not so supine as always to yield. I defend my stand eloquently at times. He remains calm. He wins. There is the cue to our difference. I am expansive, high strung, gregarious, full of energy (always taking "courses," which my husband patiently subsidizes and encourages); giving my services to worthy causes, keeping my home efficiently (with no help). There are no children—where my energies might have been best utilized.

So, on one side of the picture you have a volcano of uncanalized energy; on the other, a self disciplined, steady tower of strength—a man who, with industry and integrity, performs a useful service in the world. In fact, he is so busy day and night that, except for two meals eaten together daily, I see very little of him. We go to a movie about once a month. We danced together (when invited out) once last year. He doesn't play any games. Three or four times a year we take walks together. (We both walk alone a lot).

He prefers the solitude of his own room every night to any company—except on rare occasions. His downright churlishness to some visitors has been a sore spot with me since the beginning of our married life. I love people just for appealing traits in them—without enough discrimination, perhaps. We have not had a vacation together in eight years, except for one visit to his family (he had to go on business) and one week at a nearby resort four years ago. I go everywhere alone (or with some woman)—concerts, lectures, theaters or other public gatherings. My husband provides the money and urges me to go. About once a week he takes me out to dinner—always to one of three places, where a sensible table d'hote dinner costs 75 cents. My husband would say finances limit us, but his income is above the average and other couples have more fun on less money.

Don't scold me for not being grateful for what I have, for I love my husband and the small, comfortable home we are buying; and my friends and books and even the opportunity for being alone at times—and I do cultivate a variety of interests. Moving about as we have had to do, because of my husband's profession, I have never been one place long enough to follow one course of activity consistently. I am handicapped by lack of formal education (college credits) in entering work for which I might qualify by natural ability.

I don't worry so much about our individual economic security (dependent on salary), for, according to a recent Gallup Poll, our position is prevalent among the majority of American families. But the economic insecurity, together with the whole world tension, does lead me to ask more play in life, and a more serious task to perform, than is consistent with being a model housewife to a hermit. ANONYMOUS.

The Marriage Pattern

DEAR ANONYMOUS: If I may say so, I think the "fundamental difference of character" between your husband and yourself has already been rather nicely conciliated, in a most important aspect. For is he not, by nature, the sturdy oak? And are you not a clinging vine? And haven't you done a first-class job of leaning for 20 years?—even if, during that time, you have likewise been waving the tendrils of tentative aspirations (vine-like) in innumerable directions, "by always taking courses which (your) husband patiently subsidizes and encourages?"

Frankly, I cannot imagine a more worthwhile or more appealing task for a woman to discharge than that of being (through wifehood) the silent partner (more or less) of "a man who, with industry and integrity, performs a useful service in the world." Any woman who cannot make a richly satisfying adventure of a lifetime's companionship with a man who is "a self-disciplined, steady tower of strength," is a woman who doesn't know how to make use of singular opportunities when they are thrust upon her.

It seems to me that Anne Morrow Lindbergh, both in her writings and general deportment, has set for womankind a thrilling example in this respect. Slight, sensitive, imaginative, greatly gifted, altogether feminine, she has—with extraordinary deftness—adapted herself with personal distinction and profit to the world, to the peculiar conditions imposed by her illustrious husband's aeronautically pioneering career. Moreover, I was tremendously impressed by Erika Mann's intimate account, recently published in a national magazine, of the "silent partner's" contribution which her mother has made to the life of her father, Thomas Mann, literary genius now in exile from his native land, who has been called "the greatest living writer."

Such women are touched with genius themselves, no doubt—if we are to accept the late Thomas A. Edison's alleged definition of genius, to-wit: "One percent inspiration and 99 per cent perspiration." Contentment and a sense of personal significance come with achievement, and achievement, for man or woman, comes through applying one's self, with indefatigable patience and industry, to the task that life has apportioned, or that one has deliberately chosen. What women like you want, in the way of destiny's finger beckoning to personal fulfillment, is 99 per cent inspiration and one per cent perspiration (if, indeed, any perspiration at all). I sometimes think; or, in lieu of that, perhaps, a life partner who will carry you on his shoulders along the path you think you want to go.

Since you are married to a man who is so devoted to his work that he has little interest in time-frittering activities, and since you are addicted to "courses," it seems to me the wisest thing you could have done, back along the path of the years, would have been to specialize in studies that would have qualified you to be an enlightened, sympathetic and really helpful "silent partner" in his life. But I doubt that you have ever looked upon yourself as your husband's partner, in a literal and vocational sense. I think, rather, that you have looked to him to be a dependable meal ticket and constant social squire, and have been disappointed in the latter expectation.

The fact that you had no children made it particularly advisable, I think, for you to try, in other ways, to effect an indestructible merger of fundamental mutual interests of a significant and serious kind. I am sure you will admit that it would be ridiculous in the extreme to ask him to yield his orderly, contributive way of life in favor of your superficial, shifting patterns. Things being as they are, at this rather late date for change or improvement, I can only suggest that you stop squawking and be happy in the knowledge that your husband is willing to put up with your essential parasitism and discontent, in exchange for your no doubt rather amusing and stimulating qualities.

Spring Petticoats Designed to Show

New York (AP).—There's a Petticoat Lane on every fashion map this spring. And the things that are shown there would give grandmother a pointer or two.

In the first place the new ones stop at the knees in a way that would have horrified grandmother. In the next place they are made of gay swishing rayons she never knew as well as of her beloved batiste. And last, they are sometimes designed to show—a thing grandmother's petticoat never did purposely.

Your Figure, Madame!

To Keep Thin, Avoid Too Many Desserts, Continue Exercise

"AND NOW WHAT!" That's the demand of those who have reduced and are puzzled as to how to go about keeping slim. You know that if you go back to your old habits of eating you will begin to gain, and that if you stay on your diet—not that you would want to—you will get too thin.

The answer for you is a maintenance menu and before you start tearing your hair let me hasten to assure you that from now on life will be comparatively easy. You can forget about the calorie counting and be guided by a few simple rules which, I hope, will turn into habits.

Avoid Fat Meat

There are some things you had to give up in order to reduce, and if you want to keep your weight right where it is you might as well renounce them forever. Fat meat is first on the list. It is a trouble-maker and has no place in any keeping-slim diet. And those good old days of spreading gravy lavishly over everything are gone forever. Use it sparingly, if at all, to avoid more weight trouble.

Put a limit on the desserts . . . never have them more often than three times a week unless you take fruit. You can always have fruit, fresh or canned, and it is good for that schoolgirl complexion, too. But you can never go back to the old fattening habit of having two rich desserts in a day—not and stay slim. To forestall the temptation to overeat on bread and butter, restrict the bread to two slices per meal, the butter to one pat per meal.

Beware this if you would keep the scales from mounting

You can have sugar and cream in your coffee as long as you do not overeat generally and count the scales up. Black coffee has no power to keep you slim. Many an overweight takes her coffee clear and then eats a chocolate eclair or some other high-calorie pastry. The habit of taking cream and sugar with your coffee is not as damaging to your figure as the habit of eating pastries.

Another choice you will have to make, if you are to stay slim, is between the dessert and alcoholic beverages. There is no prohibition of these beverages in a keeping-thin program, but you will have to practice moderation and strike a balance by leaving out the desserts.

Continue Exercise

It is a good plan to continue to eat three fairly satisfying meals a day, never overeating at any meal, and omitting entirely the snack at bedtime.

Above all, continue your exercise! Well-toned muscles repel the deposit of fat, and general exercise is always in order. If your reducing program included exercises to slim you down in spots, you must continue them to keep streamlined.

Hatless Girls Hurt Business Of Milliners

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Never have I seen so many girls on our streets with bandaged legs and ankles. What is—ski-flops, or just quick kicks by rivals or maddened boy friends? And I still have to see a young man with blond, wavy hair who will wear a hat as much as a block. Vain creatures! . . .

Cholly Knickerbocker reports that too many of the local cute kids are going without hats this spring—thus driving our better milliners nearly to a plunge off the dock. He names "Cookie" Young, Gloria Baker, Vivi Fairchild and that Frazier girl (what's her first name again?) as hatless wonders of the season. Quite true—I've seen it. But the vogue or habit was not begun by the kiddies who run in the cafe set, but by older and wiser and more casual women—such as "Bea" Kaufman, wife of George S., the playwriter. With the youngsters, I have a hunch, it's just a stunt. With their elders and betters probably it is a matter of head freedom—they just don't like hats.

BEATRICE LILLIE'S 6-foot son, Sir Robert Peel, who is all of 18, has been given a terrific rush ever since he arrived in town not long ago. Big Sir Bob is guested here and there by the city's cutest girls. As for hopeful mammas who wouldn't mind a marital alliance for a daughter with a lanky British baronet—don't ask. I won't tell the worst about New York!

My favorite weekly department in a local newspaper—"Bicycling Today and Yesterday." Just imagine! "Fast girls" on bikes! Faugh! Next thing you know, someone will expect our young ladies to ride in a horseless carriage—or even in one of those new-fangled flying machines! Horrors!

GLORIA BRISTOL, the beautician, has thought up a new honey for a great store here. She has installed a neat white department which prescribes the perfect beauty treatments for the needs and personality of each customer—they look like medicine, but they work like a charm. Even the attendants are nurses. This is putting beauty treatments on a very high professional scale, girls!

Mrs. William Douglas Honored at Luncheon

Mrs. Thurman Arnold Is Hostess; Wife Of Supreme Court Justice Shines as Able Raconteur, Tells of Son's 'Business Career'

Seven-year-old William Douglas (better known as "Bumble") is following in the footsteps of his famous father, the Supreme Court Justice who once lived in a tent while earning his way in the world. Young William makes pin money shining shoes at a dime each, and the other day amassed 60 cents by his efforts. When his father was sworn in as Justice on Monday, his 7-year-old son kept whispering to his mother, "How am I going to spend my money?" Finally, in desperation, Mrs. Douglas said, in the midst of the swearing-in ceremonies, "Come along, we'll take a taxi to the ten-cent store and get back in time for lunch." Their disappearance before the end of the session was widely reported and speculated on but that is the real reason.

Mrs. Douglas revealed this yesterday in the round of table talk at a luncheon given in her honor by Mrs. Thurman Arnold, wife of the Assistant Attorney General. An able raconteur herself, Mrs. Arnold amused her guests with a number of the anedotes for which she is famous.

Among those present were Mrs. Richard Patterson, wife of the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, who wore a tailored black coat over a figured print, and a highcrowned black hat with a flowing veil (she gave a dinner on Thursday for Miss Jacqueline Cochran, the aviatrix), Mrs. William Stanley, in a frock of old rose and white figured silk; Mrs. Bulkley Griffin, Mrs. A. C. Acheson, Mrs. Samuel O. Clark, Mrs. Bruce Smith, and Mrs. Wesley Sturges, whose husband recently came here as executive director of the Distilled Spirits Institute, having formerly been a professor of law at Yale University.

The pretty guest of honor wore a pale pink frock and a blue hat trimmed with white violets, and Mrs. Arnold was in greenish-gray crepe with a Roman striped sash.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold's home in nearby Virginia was the scene of the party. Luncheon was served at a long table decorated with Spring flowers, and the homemade strawberry ice cream and angel cake came in for some enthusiastic comments from the guests.

Mrs. McNary Honors Out-of-Towner

Yesterday seems to have been a day of ladies' luncheons. Also among the hostesses was Mrs. Charles McNary, wife of the Senator from Oregon, who entertained at the Sulgrave Club in honor of Mrs. Albert S. Peake, wife of Col. Peake, of Fort McPherson, Ga. Mrs. Peake is visiting the McNarys at their home on P street in Georgetown, and her hosts gave a cocktail party for her at the Club on Thursday.

Today Mrs. Peake will be feted at a luncheon to be given by Mrs. J. B. Patch, wife of Col. Patch, and on Monday she will be honored at a similar party to be given by Mrs. A. H. Blanding, wife of Gen. Blanding. Mrs. Peake will leave on Tuesday for a visit at Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

Ranking guests at the luncheon yesterday were Mme. Recinos, wife of the Minister of Guatemala, and Mrs. William Borah. At the cocktail party on Thursday, Mrs. Peake shared honors with Mr. and Mrs. Donald Sterling, of Portland, Oreg., who came on for last Saturday's Gridiron dinner.

Mrs. Stone Feted by Mrs. Parker West

Mrs. Parker West also entertained at luncheon yesterday, her guest of honor being Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone. The company of eighteen sat at a long table which was decked in all-white scheme, carried out with snapdragons, sweetpeas, tulips, jonquils and stock.

Guests were Mrs. Daniel Reed, Mrs. Ralph O. Brewster, Mrs. John Taber, Mrs. Ralph Church, Mrs. Samuel King, Mrs. John Hess, Mrs. Peyton Gordon, Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. Dion Williams, Mrs. Walter Jones, Mme. Ricardo Alfaro, Mrs. Benton McMillin, and Mrs. Eldon King.

The Friday Evening Dancing Class, in which Maj. and Mrs. West have been interested for a number of years, will close its season with a "Rainbow" dinner dance on May 5.

Interesting Biography of Senator Glass By Virginia Writer Off Presses Soon

RIXEY SMITH, of Virginia, has written a biography of Senator Carter Glass which will be published about May 1. When the book was begun, Senator Glass felt that no one could possibly be interested in his story. After it was completed no less than 15 publishers wanted it . . . so Senator Glass has had to change his mind.

The biography begins with a litle boy defying the entrance of Yankee troops into his home town of Lynchburg, Va. Whereupon a Yankee officer reaches down from his horse, grabs the litle boy by the seat of his pants and carries him into the city, riding in front of him.

The 500-page book is most attractive with a picture of Senator Glass on the cover. The book contains interesting private correspondence between Mr. Glass and numerous celebrities, including Woodrow Wilson and President Roosevelt

Dan Olney, young sculptor, of Washington, formerly of Hayfields in Virginia, near Fredericksburg, is staying with Mr. and Mrs. Rixey Smith. He is doing a head of Mr. Glass.

THIS HAS been a month of numerous sporting events in the hunt country of Maryland, with point-to-point races or steeplechases every Saturday. Today will be run the Little Grand National point-to-point, starting at 4 p. m. Nearly all the sportsmen from Virginia are journeying there this afternoon to see the horses go. Next Saturday, April 29, the Maryland Hunt Cup will be run, beginning at 4 o'clock. This now famous classic is one of the greatest steeplechases over timber in the world and is to America what the Grand National is to England. Entries for the Maryland Hunt Cup will close today.

THE NEXT large sporting event in Virginia will take place at Warrenton on May 6, when the Virginia Gold Cup will be run over the Broadview course. Homes and hotels will be full to overflowing that week-end. Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Winmill have sent out cards for a luncheon before the races at their home, Clovelly, near Warrenton. There will be a large luncheon at North Wales Club, where members will entertain out-of-town friends.

White House Reception and Stunt Party Keep Delegates to C. A. R. Session Busy

Mrs. Swanson and Mrs. Wallace Hostesses At Affair; Sightseeing Also Precedes Opening Parley Today; D. A. R. Congress Ends

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

A visit to the White House yesterday noon, sightseeing in the afternoon and a stunt party last night comprised a full program for members of the National Society, Children of the American Revolution, preceding the formal opening of their forty-fourth convention at Memorial Continental Hall this morning.

Activity had shifted yesterday afternoon from Constitution Hall, where the Daughters of the American Revolution closed their forty-eighth Continental Congress, to Memorial Hall, where the children gathered to register. There were boys and girls of all ages, from little Carla Maxine Markham, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Carl Markham, of the District, youngest senior president's alternate at the convention, to young people of high school age.

Among the young members were Allison Paulett, of Lieut. John Shaw Society, and Sterling John Eagelton, of Harriet M. Lothrop Society, of the District, who were dressed in colonial costume and acted as flower pages for Mrs. William H. Pouch, national president, at the White House reception. She received with Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, acting as hostess in Mrs. Roosevelt's absence, and they were joined later by Mrs. Henry A. Bill Berner was master of ceremonies for the stunt party last night at the Lafayette. Mrs. John Morrison Kerr, who is scheduled for unanimous election as national president, succeeding Mrs. Pouch, was general chairman. The boys and girls from various sections of the country who participated in the program, spent the afternoon rehearsing.

Parker, of Pennsylvania, in a dance, "To Three Little Fishes;" Frieda Lacey, of Chicago, who played an accordion solo; James King, of Egypt, Miss., in a piano solo; Caroline Shavez, niece of Senator Dennis Chavez, of New Mexico, who gave a Spanish dance, and James Stevens, of East Orange, N. J., a monologue, "Trains."

The convention will be called to order by Mrs. Pouch this morning at 9 o'clock in Memorial Continental Hall, preceded by a concert by the U. S. Marine Band Orchestra. The Rev. A. C. Langston, rector of Pohick Church, will offer the invocation. Florence Kendall, of New York, will lead the pledge of allegience to the flag, and William Tyler Page, 3d, of the District, will lead "The American's Creed." There will be greetings from Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., president general of the D. A. R., and Messmore Kendall, president general of the S. A. R., a welcome to the delegates by William Pennington, and response by Esther Whitaker Griffin, of Mississippi. Convention singing will be led by Mrs. Harold B. Gardner, of New Rochelle, N. Y., chairman of music. The program is in charge of Mrs. Geoffrey Creyke, of the District.

Tennesseans To Re-enact Pioneer Games

16 Youths to Stage Old Dance at Folk Festival April 27-29

The oldest form of entertainment known to Americans will be seen at the National Folk Festival next week. Some call them play party games; some call them singing games; to some of us, they're just museum pieces.

But down in Smithville, Tenn., these musical games have not yet been supplanted by the movies as the thing to do on Saturday night. And from the Smithville High School, 16 young people will come to Washington to play the games at Constitution Hall next Friday, the second day of the three-day festival.

Ticket sales for the National Folk Festival already are 50 per cent ahead of last year. Festival leaders urge immediate purchase of tickets, as the best seats are dwindling rapidly.

Brought From England

Singing games arrived in the Tennessee hills before 1800 with the Anglo-Saxon pioneers, who brought them from England, where the games had been popular for centuries. What we know as the Virginia Reel is more familiar in rural Tennessee as "Weevily Wheat," a variant which will be presented here by the Smithville group.

Better known among school children in the East are such singing games as "London Bridge," "Oats and Beans and Barley Grow," "Ring Around a Rosie" and "Farmer in the Dell."

Games served many purposes at frontier parties. Sometimes no fiddler was available, so guests at parties had to sing their own accompaniment.

Sometimes strict religious beliefs in the section prohibited the fiddle as an "instrument of Satan." But even at square dances, singing games had their part as a means of choosing partners. Incidentally, "Yonder She Comes," a game which will be performed at the festival, was the "Post Office" of our pioneer forefathers.

Mayor Sponsors Trip

Mayor J. E. Evins, of Smithville, is personally sponsoring the youngsters' trip. (His grandson is one of the performers.) L. L. McDowell, principal of the Smithville School and president of the Tennessee Folklore Society, will bring the group to Washington. McDowell, who has been familiar with singing games and square dances since his childhood, recently published "Folk Dances of Tennessee," a description and historical study of the games.

The eight couples who will be seen at Constitution Hall Friday were selected at a community festival held in Smithville this month.

Tickets for the sixth annual National Folk Festival April 27-29 are available at The Washington Post, 1337 E street northwest, daily and Sunday from 8 a. m. until midnight. Prices for the three matinees range from 50 cents to $1; for the evening shows, from 50 cents to $2. A different show will be presented at each performance.

What Price God's Word? Is Rev. Hixson's Topic

The Rev. George S. Hixson will preach at Suitland, Md., Christian Church tomorrow at 10 a. m. on "What Price God's Word?"

At 8:30 p. m. the choir of Magruder Memorial Christian Church, of which he also is pastor, will sing a cantata, "The Risen King."

Speak for Selves, Girls Urged In Beauty-Brains Contest

Miss Charlotte Whittington, 8608 Woodside Parkway, Silver Spring, who works for the Federal Alcohol Administration, and Miss Ann Wallis, Nurses Home, St. Elizabeths Hospital, Interior Department, are two of yesterday's entrants in The Post — AFGE "Beauties Witn Brains" contest.

Wallis

Whittington

Miss Wallis' snapshot was sent in by an admirer, who wrote "She is tops!" on the back of the snapshot. The contest editor of The Post finds it easy to agree. It's perfectly all right for the men to send in the pictures of their favorite Government girls—but girls, don't wait for someone else to do it. Send in your own, and join the patrade. That first prize of a loving cup and an all-expense trip to the New York World's Fair is worth shooting for.

The preliminary judging will be done from the pictures. Those who get into the semifinals will appear before the judges on the stage of Loew's Capitol Theater and six will be selected from this group. Then the finalists will be given the "Umbrella Court" quiz on The Post's program to determine the brainiest of the beauties.

Don't forget to write your name, address and Government bureau on the back of the picture you submit. Send it to the Contest Editor of The Washington Post, or leave it at the counter in the lobby of The Post Building, 1337 E street northwest.

Mandated Isles Not Fortified, Japan Tells U. S.

By the Associated Press.

Japan has assured the United States that up to January 1, 1938, its strategic mandated islands in the Pacific, virtually surrounding the American Island of Guam, were unfortified.

A delayed annual report to the State Department, made public yesterday, asserted that "no military or naval base nor any fortification has ever been maintained or newly built within the territory."

In the categorical denial of any military measures affecting the islands, which Japan wrested from Germany in the World War, the report asserted "the natives have never been subjected to military training." The report covered 1937.

Cayton Dismisses Suit to Levy on Debtor's Wages

Judge Nathan Cayton yesterday turned thumbs down on a legal device to make things easier for bill collectors.

Judge Clayton dismissed a suit by Kelly Furniture Co. against Harry and Aaron Scheer, employers of O. S. Stroud. The furniture company showed that Stroud bought furniture and assigned his wages as security. Claiming payments were overdue the company asked the employer for the money.

Judge Clayton said he could not uphold such an arrangement and that if the installment seller wished to file suit the action would have to be against the man who bought the goods.

Adaptability Man's Only Hope, Biologist Says

Only the fact that man has "greater innate power of adaptability than any other organism ever known" gives any hope that humanity will survive, in view of five-fold population increase in the last 300 years, Dr. Raymond Pearl, professor of biology at Johns Hopkins University, told the Graduate School of the Department of Agriculture yesterday.

Survival problems never before known are presented by population growth, even though the birth rate has been slowing up throughout the world in the present century, Dr. Pearl said.

House Gets Bill To Allow Liquor Price-Fixing

Rep. Shafer Sponsors Measure to Outlaw Cut-Rate Sales in D. C.

A new move to prohibit cut-rate sale of branded liquors was started yesterday as Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, a member of the House District Committee, introduced a bill which would permit manufacturers to contract with District of Columbia retailers to fix minimum sale price.

The measure authorizes the D. C. Alcoholic Beverage Control Board to suspend or revoke licenses of retailers who break such an agreement.

Organized liquor retail dealers in Washington have been trying in vain to induce the A. B. C. Board to set up regulations which would hamper cut-rate stores.

The Shafer bill is similar to the Kennedy measure, which will be called up in the House Monday, except that the latter is not restricted to one product and is designed to aid the National Retail Druggists' Association.

The Kennedy bill would make agreements between manufacturers and retailers as to prices lawful.

5 Approved For Place on D.C. Committee

4 Midwesterners in Group; May Change Milk Inquiry Line-up

Four Midwesterners and a Pittsburgh lawyer have been recommended by members of the House District Committee to fill five majority vacancies on the committee, it was learned yesterday. The appointments, however, are not expected to be made until early next week.

The selections actually will be made by the Ways and Means Committee, and there was some doubt yesterday whether or not the District Committee's recommendations will be accepted in view of the approaching fight over the local milk act.

Starts Next Week

With the milk investigation scheduled to start next week, the five new members may well prove the balance of power in deciding whether to recommend that the milk act be amended so as to permit the legal importation of Northwestern milk and cream.

As the committee now stands the Western bloc is largely centered in the minority members. None of the Democratic members come from dairy sections that are anxious to invade the Washington market.

The five nominees for the District Committee vacancies are:

Rudolph G. Tenerowicz, a physician, of Detroit, who would have no particular interest in the economic phases of the milk fight.

Ohio Man Chosen

John F. Hunter, of Toledo, a lawyer, who likewise has no axe to grind for dairy farmers.

Frank W. Fries, of Carlinville, Ill., a coal miner and businessman.

Vincent F. Harrington, of Sioux City, Iowa, a former economics teacher and banker.

Herman P. Eberharter, of Pittsburgh, a lawyer who is far away from the Western milk-producing area.

Representative Tommy D'Alesandro, of Baltimore, is still trying to get on the District Committee and may replace one of the five nominated. The committee feels, however, that two Marylanders are enough on the District Committee.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Felian Grazia gives a recital of piano compositions by Chopin on Friday evening in the Arts Club of Washington.

A group of music lovers who know their Chopin and appreciate the knowledgeable manner in which Felian Garzia handles the poetic piano music of that composer assembled last evening in the small auditorium of the Arts Club for an enjoyable hour and a half of listening. It was time well spent, for the player was at the top of his technical form and in sympathetic rapport with the music he was expounding. There was sensitive feeling in all his interpretations, and the playing ran the gamut of dynamics from subtlety to powerful emphasis.

From the preludes he selected for his first group those in C major, G major, F minor, F sharp minor, B flat major, G minor, E flat major and D minor. Their varied moods were nicely discriminated, and the emotional character of each piece definitely projected. After these came the great B flat minor sonata which was read with a convincing eloquence.

A second group contained the Fantaisie-Impromptu the B flat minor Scherzo, the Berceuse and the G minor ballads. In the performance of these miniature tone-poems Mr. Garzia was imaginative as well as dextrous, and his readings were equally satisfactory from either point of view.

In the concluding group the artist turned his attention to the "Butterfly" and "Black Keys," etudes with brilliant effect, after which he presented Leopold Godovski's ingenious and difficult combination of the two in "Badinage." The final number was the tempestuous Polonaise in A flat major, aptly named the "Heroic."

Judge Frees False Alarm Suspect

Charges of pulling four false fire alarms were dismissed against Edward W. Gibbs yesterday when the government was unable to introduce as evidence a dictaphone record. Police Court Judge Hobart Newman handed down a directed verdict of acquittal.

Gibbs was charged with sending fire apparatus to the home of Mrs. Hazel Duffey, of the 1200 block Thirteenth street northwest. The prosecution had intended to submit a record which supposedly was made of Gibbs' voice in a telephone conversation.

Dutch Housing Co-operatives Described Here

Municipalities Also Erect Apartments for Aged, Large Families

Dutch co-operative housing for low-income tenants particularly stressing accommodations for single women, old couples, and large families, was described by Jan Bommer, of Amsterdam, at the National Catholic School of Social Service, 2400 Nineteenth street northwest, last night.

The meeting was under the joint auspices of the Social Service School, the School of Public Administration of American University, and the School of Social Work of the Catholic University.

Ihlder Attends

In the audience were John Ihlder, chief of the District Alley Dwelling Authority and Miss Elizabeth Moore, of the United States Housing Authority. The Rev. Lucian L. Lauerman, director of the National Catholic School of Social Service, a Catholic University institution for graduate women student social workers, presided at the meeting.

Bommer, a member of the Amsterdam City Council and executive director of the Federation of Public Housing Societies of the Netherlands, was invited to this country by the National Public Housing Conference.

He told of the development of co-operative housing societies for low-income families since 1901, and of municipal housing projects for elimination of slums. At present, he reported, 36,000 houses out of the 220,000 that house Amsterdam's population of 800,000 are dwellings erected by such societies or the municipality. The total erected by societies and municipalities in Holland since 1901 is 220,000, and there are now 1,000 co-operative public housing societies.

Family Types Subsidized

The houses pay their way, Bommer said, and rent for the equivalent of $6 a week—a rental that is equal, Ihlder pointed out, to similar developments in the United States. The speaker showed pictures of apartment house groupings for single women.

Smaller houses, situated so that "old people can see what is going on in the street," are grouped in communities for aged couples. Special subsidies for houses for large families cause them to rent at the same cost as those for ordinary-sized families.

Detective Nabs Man He Jailed In 1932 for New Burglary

Bethesda Housebreaker Is Captured And $1,500 in Jewels Are Recovered; Miscreant Left Prison in February

Detective Sergt. Aubrey Tolson's memory is a long one—and because of it the housebreaker he captured seven years ago was back in a cell at Bethesda last night, and $1,500 in jewels was recovered.

Arrest of the burglar—who is being held on an open charge—ended an outbreak of house looting in Bethesda and adjacent District areas.

In 1932 police of the Eleventh Precinct were baffled for weeks by a burglar who used a glass-cutter on front doors and escaped with $9,000 in gems and other valuables. Tolson, now with the homicide bureau, was then a precinct detective. He finally ran down the burglar through a woman's tip and recovered $8,000 of the loot. The burglar was given ten years.

This past week, on hearing that Bethesda homes were being burglarized almost nightly, he asked a few questions of Bethesda police. He learned the Bethesda burglar was using the same methods as the man he sent to Occoquan.

A checkup revealed that the burglar he caught was no longer in prison; in fact, had been released in February.

So back on the trail went Tolson, aided by Det. Harry Moore. He found the woman tipster; he found the ex-convict; and in the latter's room he found $1,000 in gems. Later, he also recovered a $500 necklace.

Students Tell What Parents Should Be Like

Today's children expect more in a parent than someone aloof, who punishes you when you are naughty and rewards you when you are good, a conference of high school students decided last night. They want a real companion, one in whom they can confide, and one who will direct their lives toward an ideal.

The decision was made by a panel, representing all high schools in the District, lead by Dr. Alice B. Keliher, chairman of the committee on human relations of the Progressive Education Association.

Sponsored by the Washington branch of the Progressive Education Association, the meeting opened with the showing of parts of the film, "Captains Courageous."

Life Begins at 70

MRS. T. J. WHITE

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding so-called "old-age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are.—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

Girls like Willie Ruby Graves White die but they never grow old.

Yesterday, as she played hookey briefly from the D. A. R. convention for the sake of an interview in the pressroom below, her hair was white and her shoulders stooped but the Texas buckarette who bounced Morris Sheppard on her knee years before he knew such a thing as a Senate existed was as youthful as any of the pretty pages who fluttered in and out.

Mrs. Thomas Jefferson White wears her 82 years lightly. Eight years ago she received her bachelor's degree from Baylor University, not an honorary degree but the real thing. She is on the go almost constantly in Texas, presiding over her Shakespeare Club, doing research in history, attending meetings of the D. A. R. and the Daughters of the Texas Republic.

This is her first visit to Washington. In fact, she'd never been east of Kansas City before, save for a dip into Louisiana. She is having a grand time out here in the Far East, she says.

One of her greeters was Senator Tom Connally.

She has known 21 Governors of Texas and was related to five of them by marriage. She remembers instructing Senator Sheppard, when he was a child, to wash his hands on a certain occasion and how, when he visited her home town not long ago, she informed him that he had always kept his hands clean.

She pointed out that yesterday was the 103rd anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto, recalling what a gallant stand the Texans made that date against the Mexicans. Her birthplace in Washington County, Texas, is only eight miles from where the Texans declared their independence. Her present home is in Coleman.

Mrs. White was graduated from Baylor College in 1874 but in those days women students were not eligible for degrees. Her alma mater offered her an honorary degree when she was past 70 but she politely declined, asking to be permitted to work for a B. A. instead. Majoring in literature and history, she made it, too.

Woman Freed In Theft of Letters Here

Asserts Documents on Pendergast Were Found in Trash

Mrs. Margaret Braun, middle-aged domestic who last week turned over to the Department of Justice seven letters containing information against a Kansas City Democratic Party faction, was acquitted in Police Court yesterday of stealing the documents.

Judge Edward M. Curran dismissed the case, stating that he was not convinced that the woman stole the letters from the home of Lambert O'Malley, 1329 Ingraham street northwest.

Percy B. Sovey, secretary to Representative Joseph Brannon, of Missouri, testified that Mrs. Braun brought the letters to the Congressman's office "to see whether our faction in Kansas City might want to use them against the other faction."

O'Malley, son of R. E. O'Malley, former Missouri State insurance commissioner, who is under indictment with Thomas (Boss) Pendergast in the Kansas City probe, accused Mrs. Braun, his housekeeper, of stealing the letters from his wife's bedroom. Young O'Malley is an attorney with the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mrs. Braun told the court that she got in touch with the FBI after hearing "so much talk of attempts to frustrate the prosecution in Kansas City," and was told to obtain the letters.

The letters, valued up to $1,000 each, were brought into court. Four had been torn up. Mrs. Braun's defense was that she had found the documents in the trash, had no intention of selling the letters and never offered them for sale.

After the case was dismissed, O'Malley demanded that Judge Curran hold the woman for allegedly stealing two decks of cards from his home. Curran said that was beyond his power and O'Malley, after a consultation with counsel, decided to drop the matter.

Wild 'Western' Is on Screen At the Capitol

Eddy Goes Tough in 'Let Freedom Ring;' Godfrey on Stage

"LET FREEDOM RING." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of an original screen play by Ben Hecht, starring Nelson Eddy, with Lionel Barrymore, Victor McLaglen, Virginia Bruce, Edward Arnold, Guy Kibbee, Charles Butterworth, H. B. Warner, Raymond Walburn, Louis Jean Heydt, Dick Rich, Sarah Padden, George F. Hayes and Eddie Dunn. Directed by Jack Conway. Previewed Tuesday afternoon, April 11. At the Capitol Theater.

If you don't like "Let Freedom Ring," you might as well go back to Albania. Hokum it is, pretentious it might be, but Nelson Eddy's Wild West show is as American as a Congressman on the Fourth of July. It opened yesterday at the Capitol Theater with Arthur Godfrey's Revue as its stage companion.

Ben Hecht wrote "Let Freedom Ring" in the grand tradition of a season literally steaming with iron horses, tin bathtubs and frontier saloons, among which "Stand Up and Fight," "The Oklahoma Kid" and "Dodge City" were other such sagas. Again the wicked Wall-streeters have been terrorizing the prairies with their dust for the land they know their own railroads are about to triple in value.

Lionel Barrymore is giving a slice of his vocabulary to well-fed Edward Arnold when the film opens, boasting about what will happen when son Nelson Eddy appears on the old homestead, fresh from the glories of Harvard. And appear the offspring does, but he pulls a Scarlet Pimpernel on them, for he knows that to handle the wicked Easterners, you have to dissemble a bit. He plays up to Arnold and his Irish henchman, Victor McLaglen.

Sings Old Favorites

Like the ladies who live for the Eddy vocalizations, McLaglen melts into mush at the drop of an Irish ballad. In order to please his audiences and help tough McLaglen's attention to wander, Eddy booms out with "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and "Home Sweet Home," even singing a few choruses with more than a couple of drops under his belt. Charlie Butterworth helps him steal a printing press, and, by telling all the news that Arnold thinks isn't fit to print, Eddy saves for the natives what home lands are not actually needed for the roadbed.

Packed full of action, it climaxes with a bang-up fight on a lonely, moonlit rock between brawny McLaglen and the blond Barytone. Butterworth has some delightful utterances every nonce about "how close we are getting to 'East Lynne.'" As in any self-respecting "Western," there is heart interest in an ethereal, though calico-clad lass, this time played by Virginia Bruce. Barrymore and Arnold have their accepted characterizations.

But Eddy is the surprise of the film, slamming around like a fugitive from "Gunga Din." His songs are lusty and, if the denouement of the plot is solved by a shot of a crowd of Polacks, Swedes and Dutchmen singing "America" in one of those rustic saloons, we are not the one to mock the notion.

Godfrey Stages Revue

Arthur Godfrey's Revue is at its best when the Clarendon philosopher is philosophizing. If his show does have loose edges, Godfrey knows it and is the first to laugh it off. He jokes about himself, plays his trickily-lighted piano and delights what are obviously a theater-full of admirers with his version of his own latest song, "Grandma's Minuet."

Most important of Mr. Godfrey's performers is Cardini, whom, some day, we should like to introduce to mystery-spinner E. Phillips Oppenheim. Surely everyone knows that top-hatted, elegantly clad figure who flips his cane and cape to a pretty assistant and pulls cards, cigarettes and handerchiefs from the air. To his enviable glory, the silent conjuror adds several new tricks this visit, giving even his old followers something new to watch.

Ames and Arno are a very rough and tumble duo and Katherine Westfield is an adept mistress of marionettes. The Stapletons are at their best when they are suddenly shifting their dance tempi and Mary Russell combines with Godfrey in a duet of "Summertime."

Two other local favorites who add interest to the revue are Johnny Salb, at the organ, and Dee Clements, at the vibraphone, and their accompaniments for Godfrey help him in winning his sun-dialers' approval, an approval which greeted his farewell "Shut Eye" cordially. RICHARD L. COE.

RKO-Keith's

Deanna Durbin's latest, and, to most of her followers her finest film, "Three Smart Girls Grow Up," yesterday entered its second week at RKO-Keith's.

It was as Penny Craig, two years ago, that the charming young star made her first screen appearance. The present vehicle again finds her as the youthful Penny and Nan Grey and Helen Parrish are her two elder sisters. This time they are involved in their own boy-friend troubles and are not worrying over the attentions their father is paying to a blond schemer. Nan is the eldest of the trio, and the most delectable, and it is she who snuggles Helen's quiet-boy friend away from the middle sister.

The sensitive Deanna sees through the "mess" and sets about to right matters. In the music school, where she studies singing, she bumps into all possible "tall, dark and handsome men" as likely bait for her unhappy sister. Her comedy instincts reveal her as an expert light comedienne and when she filches one of the youths away to her magnificent home, that fellow, Robert Cummings, is also given a chance to display a delightful comedy technique. Between them they weave that web of spontaneity which is always the finest of the Durbin achievements.

Charles Winninger is Deanna's father, as he was in the first film of the three bright sisters. Ernest Cossart is the resourceful butler, and William Lundigan is the more serious suitor. Nella Walker reappears as Mrs. Craig, this time happily united to a devoted, although absent-minded husband.

Deanna's songs are expertly mixed through the film.

Keith's is also holding over the Walt Disney Silly Symphony, "The Ugly Duckling," and also presents a ten-minute short, "Air Waves."

Bob Burns Scores Laughs at Earle; Vincent Lopez Band Is a Hit

'I'm From Missouri' Is Farcical Comedy; Patricia Ellis Stars As Stage Songstress

"I'M FROM MISSOURI." Paramount picturization of stories by Homer Croy and Julian Street, adapted to the screen by John C. Moffitt and Duke Atterberry, starring Bob Burns, with Gladys George, Gene Lockhart, Judith Barrett, William Henry, Patricia Morison, E. E. Clive, Melville Cooper, William Collier, sr., Lawrence Grossmith, George P. Huntley, Doris Lloyd, Tom Dugan, Dennie Moore, James Burke and Ethel Griffies. Directed by Theodore Reed. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

If the implication of the title of "I'm From Missouri" is that its star, Bob Burns, has to be shown, somebody should show him that he has slipped from the homely virtues of "The Arkansas Traveler" into the sheerest of "gag" comedies in his latest vehicle.

BELL

This is not to say that "I'm From Missouri" isn't fairly tightly packed with laughs. It is. But they are the laughs that spring from the shrewdly fashioned vaudeville "wisecrack" rather than from any sustained effort to provide either a definitely appealing characterization or a serio-comic narrative that might carry some measure of conviction. The story is completely farcical. The lines evidently were written with the sole idea of capturing the casual, even if frequent, guffaw, rather than with any purpose of furthering Mr. Burns' career as the only discernible successor to the homespun eminence of the late Will Rogers—an objective of which he is popularly supposed to have been in hot pursuit.

"I'm From Missouri" finds The Post's humorous paragrapher in the role of a Missouri mule dealer who has come to be a banker. The sudden decline of the market has precipitated a crisis in the economic lives of the other Missouri mule breeders and Sweeney Bliss decides that something must be done about it. So he sets about selling a tremendous number of mules to the British government. His chief competitor is a cagey operator, known by the name of Porgie Rowe, dealing in tractors and mechanized transport. Mrs. Bliss is a social climber, who mistakes all of the real aristocrats she knows for consummate bums and vice versa. For instance, a couple of the "rubes" she has met in America turn out to be a Duke and Duchess of fabulous wealth in their native England.

From Missouri to London

The action, by the way, finally does move from Missouri to London and it is there that the picture goes particularly berserk, what with Mr. Bliss leading his pet mule, Samson, into an exclusive London Turkish bath and one thing and another. Mrs. Bliss doesn't help matters much by throwing an excessively swanky party at which the guest of honor has to be a bibbling vaudeville actor, impersonating a famous general. When the real notables put in their appearance, she mistakes them for interlopers. And that is the way it goes.

Anyhow, Sweeney finally sells his mules, the kid sister snares the titled engagement ring, Mrs. Bliss perceives the error of her ways and everything comes out more or less right side up.

Except that the entire charade fails to make any appreciable degree of sense, there is a great deal at which to chortle in "I'm From Missouri." Most of the amusement springs from the clever individual performances of a gifted band of principals who are handicapped only by the lack of a cohesive story. Bob Burns reverts more or less to his two-a-day method and has been given many "tag-lines" with which to fade out his scenes to the tune of riotous laughter. Gladys George, as Mrs. Bliss, plays "straight" and does whatever there is to be done with a role with which not too much can be done. E. E. Clive and Melville Cooper, two sterling British actors, cash in their burlesque roles for all the fun that is in them, which is much. William Collier, sr., has one scene in which he bids vigorously for the purchase of 2,000 mules. It develops that he wishes to buy only one. Farcial, but funny.

There are many more in the cast who do their full shares in making something out of nothing. Foremost among them are Gene Lockhart, Judith Barrett, William Henry, Lawrence Grossmith, George P. Huntley, Doris Lloyd, Tom Dugan, Dennie Moore and Ethel Griffies.

Lopez Scores Hit

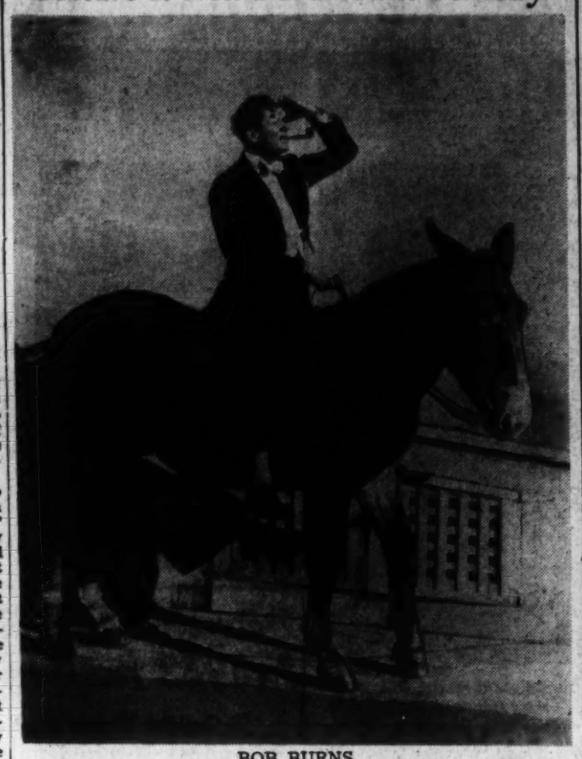
Vincent Lopez, veteran maestro and colorful showman, brings his famous band to the stage of the Earle this week to present the complete living portion of the bill. Mr. Lopez, of course, does some—not enough—of his matchless piano playing, in addition to leading his orchestra, and also introduces a considerable list of clever specialists.

Next to Mr. Lopez, the headliner of the bill is Patricia Ellis, long a popular star of the screen, who proves to be as lovely as ever and, furthermore, a vocalist of such proficiency as to "stop the show" cold in its tracks. She sang "Sing for Your Supper," "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" and "I Cried for You" yesterday afternoon with an effect that was galvanizing. Gowned in a strapless black gown, the blonde Miss Ellis presented a stunning picture and caused one to wonder why the films aren't scrambling for her—or are they?

Others under Mr. Lopez' baton are Danny Drayson, one of the best of the tap dancers in the Will Mahoney manner; Abbott and Costello, experts at cross-fire; Betty Hutton, queen of the jittergugs and all of the soloists recruited from the membership of the band.

"Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp," a multiple-reel cartoon comedy, starring Popeye, the Sailor, added another fillip of comedy to a bill that is frankly dedicated to the lightest possible forms of entertainment. Not bad for spring, at that.

Costars of New Paramount Comedy



BOB BURNS,

the one on top, as he appears in the role of Sweeney Bliss in "I'm From Missouri," the Paramount comedy now on the screen at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. The costar is Samson, the Missouri mule, the talented animal that supplies most of the motivation for a film play that contains many laughs and not much sense

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, April 21.

COUNT HAUGWITZ VON REVENTLOW: In the same secret manner in which she arranged for the renunciation of her American citizenship, your wife is arranging, with her attorney, for her naturalization . . . David Sarnoff: Elliott Roosevelt, the President's son, soon will announce facsimile broadcasts for his Texas stations. National and international news, together with all features now appearing in newspapers, will be reproduced by a radio apparatus which is akin to television.

SENATOR BOB REYNOLDS: Mrs. Louis D. Brandeis has become actively interested in securing the passage of the bill you oppose—to bring 10,000 refugee children into America. The children all have pledges from people who will support them until they're 21.

NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN: When Phil La Follette, speaking here this week end with Maurice Hindus, attacked you as well as the upper classes of Britain, members of the audience were invited to ask questions . . . The chairman of the meeting was Wendell Willkie, head of Commonwealth & Southern . . . A Britisher in the audience irately asked: "Do call this democracy—when one great democracy allows two of its citizens to attack another great democracy?" . . . "Yes," Willkie assured, "that's democracy."

JED HARRIS: "The Fifth Column," Ernest Hemingway's play which you once held under option, now has been rewritten by the author, and the production, by Lew Gensler, is all set. Hemingway has brought it up to date, inserting references to the fall of Madrid.

MAX BAER: That young man to whom you called "caddy" at your Grossinger training camp and who then carried your clubs didn't do such a good job. When your ball was hit into the rough, the "caddy" always substituted a new ball. You don't know it, but he was Mark Warnow, Columbia Broadcasting's musical director . . . Literary Guild: The posthumous novel of the late Thomas Wolfe includes a number of censorable paragraphs. Wolfe's executors won't permit changes.

JOHN PERONA: Newspapers front-paged your fight with Fred Wildman, but a better—though nonpunch—explosion occurred the same evening at the 21 Club when Harold Ross went upstairs to see Alexander Woollcott . . . Ross is the editor of the New Yorker, which published the Woollcott Profile . . . Alec was playing cribbage with Moss Hart, who dealt Woollcott a bad hand and himself a good one. Alec raged at Ross, who was standing by, and flung his cards under the table . . . Hart redealt and again he had a good hand and Alec a bad one . . . Woollcott continued to rage at Ross and again tossed the cards under the table . . . Again Moss redealt, but this time Woollcott held good cards. He stopped raging, played—and won $62.

GROVER WHALEN: Isn't it true that the Fair will close for the winter on October 31? . . . George Givot: Loew's State is taking no chances on European developmnets. They've changed your customary billing from "The Greek Ambassador" to "The Greek Philosopher" . . . Dick Merrill: Harry Richman, who just bought an estate in Hollywood, had to go out and buy ping-pong balls for his playroom. He won't use any of the thousands you both have remaining from your transatlantic flight . . . Congressman Dies: Although you complained of lack of co-operation from other Government agencies, some officials insist that the report of Bund acitivities—which was released to the press last month—first had been offered to you one year ago.

ORSON WELLES: The WPA Federal Theater's show, "Sing For Your Supper," which has been in rehearsal for more than a year, will be produced shortly . . . John Latouche wrote one of the sketches which satirizes your Mercury Theater's production of "The Cradle Will Rock" . . . Latouche encountered much difficulty in finding a blackout for this cruel satire. In desperation he appealed for help—and got it—from Marc Blitzstein, the author of "The Cradle Will Rock."

LEON HENDERSON: When the monopoly investigation hearings are resumed on May 15 one of America's top-flight author-economists will appear before it . . . Ben Marden: Joe Lewis, Broadway's favorite clown, who will work for you at the Riviera, is breaking all records during his current engagement at the Walton Roof in Philadelphia.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, April 21.—It might interest those who think our actors are a lot of sissies to know that many of them could go out and earn a nice living from things they've learned while making pictures.

HOPPER

Cecil B. DeMille, while working on "Union Pacific," was granted a license from Inter-State Commerce Commission to operate a railroad. In the same picture, Bob Preston had to do card tricks. He learned them from a card shark who said when Bob finished, "Gee whiz, he's now better than I am."

Fred MacMurray took an awful beating from three pugs, but actually learned to fight, for "Invitation to Happiness." And look at the punishment Clark Gable and Robert Taylor took.

If anything went wrong, Clark could make a fortune as a dancer. Claudette Colbert learned to shake a mean can-can.

Lucius Littlefield, master make-up man, has perfected a mask which he's about to put on the market. It will cover any disfigurement and hide bad skin completely. Looks as though he'd make a fortune out of it.

When he finishes with "Ruler of the Seas," Frank Lloyd should be able to walk the deck of any ocean liner as its third officer. But I'll bet before the voyage was over he'd be captain.

How about Lynn Overman as a bartender? W. C. Fields, Jack Barrymore and Lee Tracy could get jobs behind a bar, too. Oh, yes!

No wonder DeMille tried to buy Bob Preston's contract from Paramount. Having a player like that would save money. DeMille trained Joel McCrea, but when he wanted him for a picture it cost him $150,000. And the same studio paid $250,300 for Gary Cooper in "Beau Geste." So it's good business to train 'em, and keep 'em.

That hostess on the airliner which carried Doug and Sylvia Fairbanks to New York was trying to explain the operation of berths. Seems that they're rather tricky affairs. So, after they'd piled into their bunks, the hostess said, "I hope you two know about this berth control?

Warner Brothers have an understanding with a local auto service—in exchange for limousines for pictures, star appearances, etc., they permit sightseeing busses to drive through the studio. But the busman is not allowed to call attention to, or annoy the stars. While rounding a corner the other morning, a driver became excited when he recognized a figure walking in front of him. In a stage whisper which could have been heard in Altoona, he said, "Don't look now, but there's Bette Davis."

Woody Van Dyke, who's directing the Hardy's spring fever opus, which stars about 10 kids, got their stand-ins from the stables, no less. Jockies who needed a lift.

The joke to end all collegiate goldfish jokes: Bob Hope tells me of the midget freshman—the goldfish swallowed him!

When news is scarce, the rumors fly thick and fast that the so-and-sos are separating. But heaven be praised, they usually pick on the happiest couple. So Dick Powell and Joan Blondell, while denying, are laughing the loudest.

Two boys who don't want to be in pictures are working with Frank Capra in "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington." They blow trumpets in the sheriff's boys band.

They're exploiting the Earl Carroll restaurant for "Second Fiddle" and using his menus in the picture. "Only free thing I ever got at Carroll's," said Ty Power. His mother has taken an apartment around the corner from me, so it won't be long now.

C. Aubrey Smith, who flowers in old tweeds, burst into a guffaw when I told him Harper's had chosen him for a best dressed man. Doesn't believe it yet.

New Star Is Introduced in Columbia Film

'Prison Without Bars' Marks Local Debut Of Corinne Luchaire

"PRISON WITHOUT BARS." Alexander Korda picturization of a play by E. and O. Bla. Gina Kaus and Hans Wilhelm, adapted to the screen by Arthur Wimperis with dialogue by Margaret Kennedy, featuring Corinne Luchaire, Edna Best, Barry Barnes, Mary Morris, Marita Hunt, Margaret Yarde, Elsa Shelton, Lorraine Clewes, Glynis Johns and Kelly Wisher. Directed by Brian Desmond Hurst. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Columbia Theater.

There's a faint perfume of "Maedchen in Uniform," a whiff of "Girls' School," in Alexander Korda's "Prison Without Bars." Not that you'll find a pattern in a Korda picture. You never do. We merely refer to the point that all three pictures deal with girls under the key. The key may be that of a seminary or a reformatory—it's still a key.

This is a British picture, though we have a feeling that Korda is international, that his flickers speak the language of the world. Korda dislikes cliches, either in incident or dialogue. He doesn't hustle the action—but he gets there just the same.

A New Star

A new star, perhaps a great one, may have arisen in this picture. She's Corinne Luchaire, a slim, fair-haired French girl. Her role gives her great chances—and she doesn't skip them. Corinne begins as a girl railroaded into "Prison Without Bars," develops into a bad actor who escapes, given the shadow of a break, spends her time out getting crocked in cabarets. Returned to the reformatory, she becomes the doctor's assistant, falls in love with the doctor (he's the only man around) and beats the time of the reformatory superintendent whom she adores (pardon us if this gets too complicated), then, in a tempest of tears, gives the truth, goes out in the world as a honest girl (?). But this Corinne Luchaire (whom neither you nor I have heard of before) is a great young actress. She's a feminine Judas Iscariot and St. Francis twined together. She's the dove and the serpent, and she and Mr. Korda will leave you with something to think about.

The story of "Prison Without Bars" contrasts the clash of passee and modern reformatory methods as well as involving an integral love story. The reformatory, operated by the original Eumenides (such Freudian horrors!) is taken over by modern management. To give the repulsive Eumenides credit, we must say that lots of complications arose upon the awarding of beautiful new dormitories, shower baths and flower gardens. The girls, overcome by posies and edible food, become obsessed with thoughts of boys, cigarettes and drinkables.

Competent Support

Besides Corinne Luchaire, there are some top-notch Continental troupers in the picture. There's Edna Best, and a lovely lady and a nice actress she is, in the role of the modern-minded reformatory manager. George Barnes has the only fairly romantic role of the young doctor "in the middle."

Columbia's shorts include a special of odd sports and a cartoon on the happy theme of how the fox out-foxes the hounds.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 21.—"Goodbye, Mr. Chips," is the chief topic of conversation on the M-G-M lot these days. Interesting that the very best movie this company has made in months should have been filmed abroad under the aegis of Ben Goetz. The reaction has been surprising. Stars who in the past turned down any suggestion of making movies in England now have the urge to make a picture with the Johnny Bull influence.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Robert Montgomery will be the next M-G-M star to journey to Europe on an assignment. I talked with him at the Lighton cocktail party and he couldn't be more excited over the opportunity of making two movies with an authentic British locale. He sails in July with Mrs. Montgomery and the two children to star in both "The Earl of Chicago," and "Busman's Holiday." And by the way, Sam Woods, director of "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," would like to bring Mr. Chips (Robert Donat) to America for "Beau Brummell."

Would you like to see Bette Davis in "One Way Passage," or do you feel the re-issue of the original movie with Kay Francis and William Powell is too recent to be interesting? That's what Warners are trying to find out, for Hal Wallis has a little plan to remake the picture, this time with a South American locale and co-starring George Brent with Bette. Heard entre nous that David Selznick would give his studio with a fence around it to borrow her for "Rebecca," but I fear that is out of the question. Margaret Sullavan is another actress who could have the role for the asking.

One of the cutest youngsters on the screen is Ann Rutherford, who used to be Mickey Rooney's girl friend in "The Hardys" until she stepped out as Scarlett's sister in "Gone With the Wind." Well, it appears that Mickey will have to get along without his screen sweetheart for a while longer, for 17-year-old Ann has just been handed her first grown-up lead with the Marx Brothers in "A Day at the Circus." You can bank on it that if she lives up to expectations, she will be groomed for bigger and better things, for there isn't a studio in town that isn't searching madly for new talent.

Is Elaine Barrymore playing Hollywood both ends against the middle? She wrote us a letter loudly lamenting that the article which appears in a national magazine under the title "Hollywood Treated Me Like a Leper", was not approved by her. But there's a catch somewhere because this morning Mayme Ober Peake, who "ghosted" the yarn, read the following letter to me, which she received from Elain January 26: "Dear Mayme Ober Peake: I have just read the article and so has John and we both feel it is delightful and casual. I think it should prove amusing and I am grateful for your sympathetic treatment and trust that in the future we shall do other stories together." Since we published Elaine's side it's only fair to do the same for Miss Peake.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Annabella, who may be a week-end bride, entertaining Claudette Colbert, Mrs. Darryl Zanuck and Mrs. William Goetz at luncheon today at her home; Buster Keaton and Dorothy Lee, an unexpected pair of diners at Marcel's; Walter Lang has bought a new house big enough to include a nursery. Today, following our exclusive, Fieldsie (formerly Carole Lombard's secretary) and Walter were deluged with congratulations; more fun at the Gregory Ratoff party. Sam Pokrass played the piano and did one of his amusing monologues. Marlene Dietrich was so fascinated with Sam, she and Erich Remarque sat on the floor and listened to him. I know now why I thought Marlene was with her husband at the Guild party. Remarque looks very much like Rudy Seiber; Loretta Young, still wearing braces on her teeth, beaued by Bob Riskin; Virginia Zanuck, just back from the desert with a beautiful tan, said Darrylin, her young hopeful, decided she wanted to go in the movies and wear braces because Loretta does.

Sylvia Fairbanks deluged with questions on the Douglas Fairbanks, jr.'s wedding, said she had never seen two people more in love; Doris Warner Leroy said au revoir to all her friends. She left for the Kentucky Derby and a holiday in New York; the Cole Porters arrive next week and will live in the Richard Barthelmess home at Malibu; Gregory announced that his birthday party was a happy one because his famous wife, Eugenie Leonovitch, makes one more appearance on the stage and then gives up her career to come here and live. I hope the movies will nab her for she is a great actress; the wedding dress of Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, jr., is a rose beige silk jersey ensemble, blue channel hat trimmed in pink and white phlox, long dotted veil, blue suede pumps, white gloves and spring flowers; next week has two big premiere nights, with "Juarez" shown on Tuesday and "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" Thursday.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

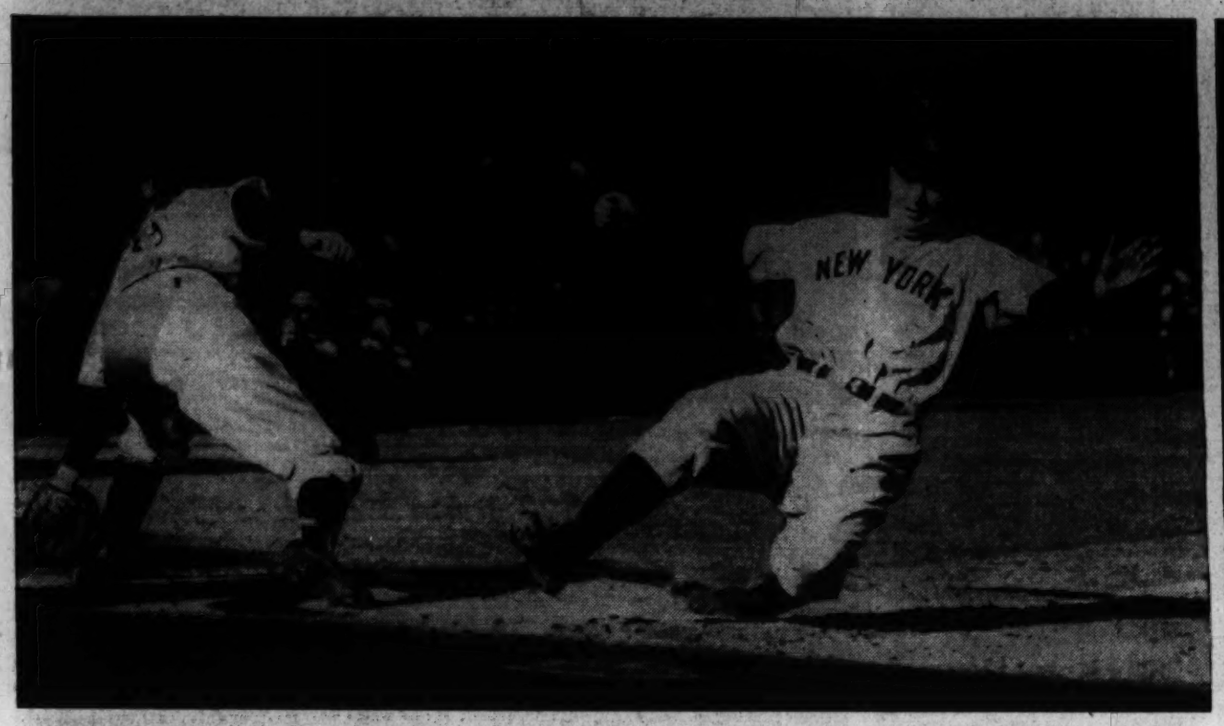
Yankee Homers Beat Nats, 6 to 3, Before 31,000

Yankees Scoring on Their Home-Run Blows Which Brought Victory



Post Staff Photos.

At left—Joe Gallagher crosses the plate ahead of the relay from the outfield after his inside-the-park homer that produced three Yankee runs in the third inning yesterday. At right, Joe DiMaggio, who hit his third-inning home run into the bleacher seats, is seen scoring more leisurely. These pictures represent 5 runs—and the ball game

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The Opening Game by the Clock:

2:45 p. m.—A Texas Leaguer is causing a commotion near the Nats' dugout. The glasses reveal he is John Nance Garner, making his debut in the Presidential box.

2:50 p. m.—The Nats and Yankees, in perfect step, march to the flagpole for the flag-raising. Skeptics are taking a last, fond look at the Nats. It may be the last time during the afternoon that they are on even terms with the Yankees.

POVICH

2:58—Texas Leaguer Garner takes a ball from Manager Bucky Harris, commits three balks, and tosses a change-of-pace pitch toward the diamond.

3:00—The Nats are getting no more reprieves from the weather man and Joe Krakauskas calmly goes to the mound to face the music, paying, perhaps, for Bucky Harris' high crime of sending him against the Yankees.

3:01—There's something cock-eyed about the way they've laid out the diamond. Ossie Bluege is stationed at first base.

3:01:30—There's nothing cock-eyed about the diamond. Jimmy Wasdell has reported a damaged thumb and Bluege has been given the first base job for the afternoon.

3:05—Jake Powell beats out a hit to Bluege, but Red Rolfe is nipped at third by Bluege's throw when he tries to advance. Joe McCarthy is arguing the decision with Umpire George Pipgras.

3:06—McCarthy is still arguing with Pipgras.

3:07—McCarthy is still arguing with Pipgras.

3:08—McCarthy is not arguing with Pipgras. They compromised. Rolfe is out.

3:09—DiMaggio hits an easy fly to centerfield and George Case is making the catch.

3:09:30—George Case is not making the catch. He is dropping the ball off his finger tips, and unless Jake Powell breaks a leg the Yankees have a run.

3:10—The Yankees have a run.

Case Surprises Gomez With a Neat Bunt

3:13—George Case lays down a bunt and is Lefty Gomez surprised?

3:13:04—Case beats out his bunt.

3:15—Buddy Lewis hits an easy grounder to Lou Gehrig.

3:15:05—For Gehrig it was no easy grounder and Lewis is safe on a fumble.

3:17—That moan you just heard was produced by Lefty Gomez and Bobby Estalella collaborating on a strikeout.

3:19—And that last moan you heard from the 31,000 was occasioned by Taft Wright striking out at the same time that Buddy Lewis was caught stealing second.

3:25—Lefty Gomez is at bat, striking out for the Yankees, and reminding you of nothing as much as a lady driver. The way he swings, you don't know whether he's waving to a friend in the stands or signaling for a left turn.

3:28—A nice way to break in for Charley Gelbert. He socks the first pitch for a double to the leftfield wall and the 31,000 like him instantly.

3:30—Ossie Bluege singles to left and the score is tied at 1-1.

3:31—The score is untied. Rick Ferrell just pounded a double to left scoring Bluege, and this is getting serious.

3:39—Never mind, Sundra. Gomez just got the Nats out without further damage.

3:42—I was just thinking that it's nonsense to talk about breaking up the Yankees. Jake Powell, the only guy capable of doing it, is under contract to the Yanks.

3:43—Courtesy of Western Union.

3:46—With Crosetti on base, DiMaggie hits a high fly to left-center.

3:46:05—High fly, hell, it's a home run and unless our arithmetic fails us the score is tied at 3-3.

Gallagher Wrecks Things With Freak Homer

3:52—The score was tied, we mean. With two Yankees on base, Joe Gallagher hits a single to left.

3:52:02—Single, your Aunt Kate, it's bounding against the leftfield boxes for a double or triple.

3:52:04—It just took another bounce—through Bobby Estalella's legs—and the way he's running Gallagher will settle for no less than a home run.

3:52:15—It's a home run.

3:55—Gordon strikes out to end this third inning, and if you think Krakauskas is being cheered, our advice is to see an ear doctor.

4:00—Must be the 4 o'clock shift . . . Anyway, Pete Appleton is now pitching for the Nats.

4:08—You should have seen that play Gelbert just came up with on Powell's hot grounder. And there are fans who are thinking that any time Cecil Travis gets well enough to play shortstop for the Nats it might be too soon.

4:16:05—Omigod, Bluege thinks there are three out and is trotting to the dugout with the ball in his hand.

4:25:04—Estalella is dashing in for the ball.

4:25:06—Well, anyway, Estalella finally arranged anschluss with the ball.

4:27—Lefty Gomez hits a single, and Alexandra goes to the bullpen for the Nats.

4:37—It's the seventh inning and the fans are standing up but they are not cheering.

4:42—Bobby Estalella, who has struck out, walked, and grounded out, completes the cycle. He hits into a double play.

4:58—Break up the Yankees!

West Replaces Estalella for Nats Today

Dutch Leonard Faces Monte Pearson in 2d Game Against Yanks

Manager Bucky Harris, displeased by two straight defeats of the Nats, last night announced a shift in his outfield lineup. Today, against the Yankees, Bobby Estalella will be benched, and the veteran Sammy West will play leftfield.

SAMMY WEST

Harris' move is designed to provide more power in the Nats' batting order. Estalella has been hitless in both of the Nats' games, failing even to drive a ball out of the infield.

"The change may not be permanent," said Harris. "I'm not giving up on Estalella. But I know him to be a slow starter in the spring. Last year at Charlotte he hit only .220 for a month before winding up with a .386 average. He'll come along. But I want West in there now, particularly against right-handed pitching.

Harris will send the right-handed Ditch Leonard against the Yankees this afternoon following the New Yorker's feast on the fast-ball pitching of Joe Krakauskas yesterday.

Shortstop Cecil Travis and First Baseman Jimmy Wasdell, notable absentees from the Nats' line-up yesterday, will rejoin the batting order today. Travis, leg-heavy from his recent illness, was benched against the left-handed pitching of Gomez yesterday. Wasdell was recovering from a damaged thumb.

Little Rock Pitcher Hurls No-Hit Game

Little Rock, Ark., April 21 (AP).—Frank Dasso, strikeout king of the Eastern League last year, pitched this season's first no-hit, no-run game in league competition today, leading Little Rock to a 7-0 victory over Memphis in the Southern Association.

Dasso, who whiffed 179 batters while hurling for Hazleton last season, struck out 11 Memphis batsmen and permitted only three to reach base—one on a walk and two on errors.

Krakauskas Regrets Curve He Threw Joe

Nats' Hurler Blames Self for Defeat; Autograph Hounds Mob Gehrig as He Leaves Park; Dressing Rooms Quiet After Game

By Merrill W. Whittlesey.

"If I ever throw that DiMaggio another curve ball I hope somebody cracks me over the head with a bat." Those were the words of Joe Krakauskas as the Nats hung around the dressing room waiting for the autograph seekers to leave the door. Most of them were in no mood for autographs.

It seems that three times last year and again yesterday 'Krakky' tempted Joe with a curve and the fourth time 'DiMag' parked the pellet in the bleachers. Now after four times Krakauskas has learned his lesson—so he says.

The Nats were boasting a 3-1 lead in the third inning, two were out, one on base, and Krakky seemed to have the ball game well under control. His fast ball was near perfection and the count was two strikes and a ball on the Yank's centerfielder.

Once Too Often

Then Krakky decided to try that outside curve once more. We all know what happened. DiMaggio hit a tremendous home run into the leftcenter bleachers and tied up the ball game.

"I wouldn't mind if he had caught one of my best pitches and parked it up there but to hit a lousy ball like that, it burns me up," Krakky continued, "next time I throw that guy a curve I'm coming in and get a bat and hit myself over the head."

The blond hurler thought it was all his fault.

Ferrell Puzzled

Rick Ferrell was just as puzzled as the 31,000 fans when Joe Gallagher whirled around after striking out, hit Ferrell on the chest and stuck his chin out, Joe Cronin fashion, in Umpire Cal Hubbard's chest.

The Yank's rookie rightfielder though there was something wrong with the way Ferrell caught the third called strike, and in explaining it to Hubbard he gave Rick quite a crack. The Nats backstop gave Gallagher a 'gentle' nudge in return, and Hubbard told Gallagher to sit down. Joe carried the argument to the next man up, the third base coach and the bench, but apparently none listened.

Quiet After Game

It might just as well have been August 25 as opening day in the dressing rooms after the game. The Nats were quiet, for several reasons, and the Yanks are so used to

New Bleacher Fans Found At Stadium

By Al Hailey.

A new type of Bleacher Fan was observed in action yesterday at Griffith Stadium as the Yankees from New York shoved the home town Nationals a rung further down the American League's ladder, if, of course, the local fellows can be considered anywhere near the ladder.

This new specimen is definitely a Grade B Bleacher Fan, however, and cannot be expected to qualify for a seat up there with the big boys for some time to come. The reason was plain to see yesterday.

The Grade B boys have not outgrown the knothole-in-the-fence stage.

Very Fickle Bunch

Positive proof of this was furnished by a hasty survey of the seven-foot fence which separates the corridors under the bleacher stands from the playing field. In the fence were several holes, and at each hole stood a Grade B Bleacher Fan—a man who had paid the price of a bleacher seat but who obviously could not stand the gaff up there with the big boys.

The situation up in the bleacher stands was a bit exacting. Crowded in shoulder-to-shoulder under a sun that soon led to a general peeling of coats, Bleacher Fans sat all about, ready to sneer or cheer, as the tides

Feller Fans 10 as Tribe Beats Tigers

Allows Only 3 Hits For a 5-1 Victory; McCoskey Hits Homer

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 21.—Youthful Bob Feller gave up only three hits and struck out ten batters today to give the Cleveland Indians a 5-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers in the tribe's season opener before 20,000 customers.

Gloomy skies helped Feller in his duel with Harry Eisenstate, Detroit southpaw. Barney McCoskey, Tiger outfielder, crashed out a home run in the sixth for Detroit's only tally. His eighth-inning single and Rudy York's single in the second were the only other blows off Feller, who gave only two walks.

The Indians scored a run in the first and third innings and virtually sewed things up in the sixth with a four-hit, two-run attack. Jim Shilling, their rookie second baseman, was hit on the head while reaching third base on a triple in the eighth inning, but walked off the field unaided.

'Krakky' Routed By Third-Inning Blast of 5 Runs

DiMaggio and Gallagher Hit for Circuit in Fatal Third; Appleton Checks Bronx Bombers For Last Six Frames; Lefty Gomez Is Winner

(Other major league baseball on Page 22. Additional pictures of Nats' opener will be found on Page 10.)

By Shirley Povich.

They opened the baseball season at Griffith Stadium yesterday with a gay fanfare, a hoisting of flags and a Vice President's pitch.

The Nats and the Yankees partook of the pre-game ceremonies and then the Nats took the field. That was the Nat's chief mistake.

They should have stood on ceremony.

As it was they took a 6-3 licking from the Yankees, to the great distress of 31,000 customers who blotted out every seat in the park save two sparsely settled patches in the far corners of the bleachers.

They took a licking from the Yankees because two broad shouldered guys named Joe—DiMaggio and Gallagher—swung bats laden with home runs against the pitching of Joe Krakauskas in a loud, third-inning eruption to knock the Washington rookie loose from five game-winning runs.

Five minutes after John Nance Garner, a Texas Leaguer named as the relief pitcher for the absent F. D. Roosevelt, had tossed a change-of-pace pitch out of the Presidential box to start the proceedings, the Yankees had their first run.

Yanks Start to Work

But they were seemingly only warming up for a typical Yankee session against Krakauskas. That happened in the third inning when eight Yankees went to bat, one of them singled, two of them walked, and two of them hit home runs.

It was very distressing because, at the time, the Nats were holding a 3-1 lead, the effects of a surprising outburst against Lefty Gomez in the second inning when the lower part of the Washington batting order stepped out of character and commenced to pound the ball for four straight hits.

Into those first three innings, the teams packed all of the game's nine runs. For the 31,000, the last six innings was a series of anticlimaxes, as the Nats waved futilely at the pitching of Senor Gomez, who weathered the second-inning storm nicely and finished up with a nine-hit performance.

The Yankees, too, were held to nine hits, but they were swinging with more authority. Two doubles as well as two homers marked the New Yorkers' offensive.

Appleton Stops Yanks

Too late, Pete Appleton made his entrance into the game. Entrusted with the Nats' pitching after Manager Bucky Harris had permitted Krakauskas to last out the explosive third inning, the veteran Appleton throttled the Yankees completely in the last six innings. Not a run did he permit, and only four hits did he yield.

He was giving valiant battle to Gomez, who suddenly reformed after the Nats' second inning and pitched seven consecutive zeroes at the Washington club, allowing only three singles along the way—one of them a bunt by Buddy Lewis. After the third inning, in fact, not a Nat could make headway as far as second base.

It was a luck-anointed run that the Yankees made to take the lead in the first inning after Krakauskas had stirred a mess of false hopes by fanning Frankie Crosetti, the first batter. He then lapsed to the extent of walking Red Rolfe, and then the Yankees proceeded to cash in on some right living.

Jake Powell got a hit when his twisting grounder pulled First Baseman Ossie Bluege off the bag, but Rolfe was out at third trying to take two bases on the blow. Bluege, after failing to beat Powell to the bag, whipped a throw to Buddy Lewis to nip Rolfe. Then DiMaggio got a hit that scored Powell from first. He got it because George Case, who was playing centerfield

News Reporter Sees His First Major Game

Hot Dogs and Fresh Air Very Pleasing; It All Turned Out Okay

By Al Friendly.

(Not a Sports Writer.)

I saw my first major league ball game yesterday. At least there were those who told me it was a ball game. I wouldn't know, not having seen anything remotely similar to this Washington-New York affair since 1919 in Salt Lake City when my Buster Brown suit was badly soiled with mustard.

I am happy to report that the game was super-colossal, almost terrific. In fact, I liked it quite well and the fresh air was very nice.

Furthermore, the caliber of hot-dogs was definitely superior to that in the old Pacific Coast League and it was interesting to muse on whether Garner and Farley, sitting in the same box, talked about 1940 Presidential possibilities.

And as for the gents who batted the ball around—oops, sorry, the boys tell me that "slugged the old horsehide" is the proper term—they seemed like nice fellows and probably had a lot of fun too.

Opinion Is Changed

I would prefer to excuse the fact that I had never seen a game before by saying I am only 5 years old or that an invincible fear of crowds runs in our family. The truth is, however, that I could vote if there were a vote in this town, and that crowds aren't especially disconcerting. The real explanation is that despite the fact I've lived within slugging distance of a major league ball park for 10 years, I have been soured on the game ever since the Salt Lake Bees threw the Pacific Coast League pennant to our hated rivals, the Vernon Tigers, back in 1919. When it was revealed that the childhood idols had not only feet of clay but bank accounts of bribes I decided baseball was spinach and so forth.

That opinion has been changed over night, of course, thanks to yesterday's exhibition between the Washingtons and the New Yorkers (Nats and Yanks, he means. Editor's note). Things moved right along, as soon as Garner made certain all the photographers had pictured him

Long Beach, Calif., April 21 (AP).—California's greatest crew in six years sounded another "on to Poughkeepsie" cry today as the Golden Bears from Berkeley rowed to an easy victory over the Bruins of the University of California at Los Angeles, winning by seven lengths over a 2,000-meter course.

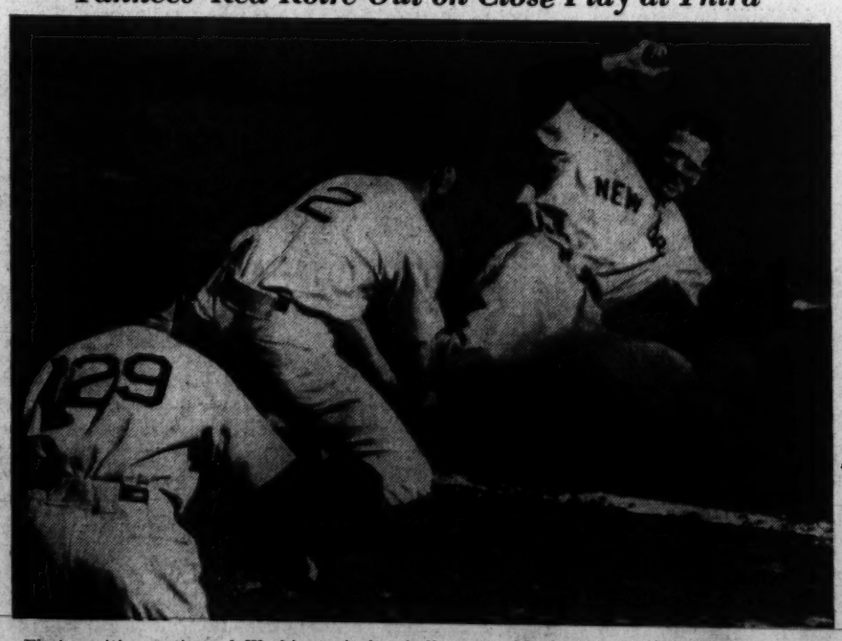
Yankees' Red Rolfe Out on Close Play at Third



First exciting action of Washington's baseball game with the New York Yankees, officially opening the 1939 season at Griffith Stadium yesterday, was when Red Rolfe, Yankee third baseman, was put out on a slide to third base by Buddy Lewis, of the Nats. Fletcher is coaching on the third-base line

Superstition Beats Two Derby Eligibles at Havre de Grace

Affair 3d in Field Of Five; Wind Drying Track Rapidly for Chesapeake Today

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 21.—Superstition, owned by Guy Bedwell, leading trainer for the season in Maryland, showed little respect for two Kentucky Derby eligibles today as he bounded up in the concluding jumps to win a thrilling photo finish of the Sky Lark Purse. The gelding came up on the outside to collar Dark Watch, owned by Chester F. Hockley, in a fit that was so tight that the judges deliberated over the picture before ordering Superstition's No. 2 displayed in the winning slot.

The third horse in the vest pocket field of five was Affair, a son of Osculator and owned by John A. Manfuso, of Washington. Affair closed two and a half lengths behind the fight for first money pair.

Superstition's victory was a popular one with the crowd. He was heavily played as a result of promising sprints and stepped over the mile and 70 yards course in 1:48 3-5. A warm sun and a mild breeze is getting the oval into good shape for tomorrow's Chesapeake, but it was still slow for this test.

Superstition was not named for the Kentucky Derby, but both Dark Watch and Affair still have an outside chance of getting a trip to Louisville.

Affair outran his rivals going to the clubhouse turn and held a length and a half advantage as the field moved along the backstretch with Dark Watch second. Many Flags third and Superstition, under the rating of Apprentice Vicent Polk, fourth. Leaving the backstretch, Dark Watch went to the inside of Affair and gradually wore him down to take command entering the stretch. Superstition, being hard urged, came to the outside of Affair.

In the drive to the wire, Superstitution gradually wore down his rival, but even those right on the line could not separate them. The picture showed the tip of Superstition's nose over the line.

Superstition, away from the winner's circle since the fall meeting here last September, was a $4.90 favorite.

Another close finish marked the running of the fifth race, the next best offering. In this event, D. J. Sullivan's Trina duplicated the feat of Superstition by taking the purse in the final jump. The 5-year-old mare forced Blazing Heat to second money. Gustav Ring's Slattern was third in the thrilling blanket finish. Once again, the favorite players profited. Trina was well liked at a $6.20 mutuel.

Blazing Heat set all of the early pace in this mile and 70 yards race. Trina moved to her at the far turn and it was a dog-eat-dog affair from that point to the end. Blazing Heat gained an advantage in the stretch but Trina came on to click at the wire.

Johnny Adams, leading rider in this country in 1937 and a disappointment in his work here, came through with his first winner of the meeting in the first race. He rode Grand Duke, making his first start, to victory over Idle Elf, James Pal and six others. The Stimulus gelding was a $16.20 shot and the first of two winners for Mrs. A. J. Abel. Her Sir Mowlee scored in the third to bring a pay-off of $20.50.

Those who bet "13" in the daily double, were lucky enough to collect $106.70.

American Byrd In Fast Workout

Louisville, Ky., April 21 (AP).—Working on a sloppy track at Churchill Downs this morning American Byrd, W. H. Whitehouse's Kentucky Derby eligible, went a mile and one-eighth in 2:02.

The first nominee for the May 6 classic to train over that distance at the Downs, American Byrd favorably impressed the hardboots at the track.

The Whitehouse colt was clocked in :51 3-5 for the half; 1:19 at the three-quarter post and the mile in 1:47.

Two other Derby candidates, Up the Creek and Giles County, from the Milky Way Stable, worked over the three-quarter route.

Up the Creek, accompanied by Warbridge, was clocked at the quarter in :25, the half in :51 and the three-quarters in 1:21. Giles County, with Banner Man for a companion, ran the distance in 1:20 breezing.

Experts Pick 'Chico to Win On Derby Day

Challedon, Technician And Johnstown Also Threats, Poll Shows

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 21.—The "experts," 448 of them from coast to coast, are mighty high on El Chico in the Kentucky Derby.

Although they voted before the William Ziegler, jr., colt ran, and lost, his first 3-year-old start last week, 184 of the sports editors and turf writers who balloted in a poll conducted by the Churchill Downs Track picked the son of John P. Grier to win the Blue Grass classic.

One hundred others thought the little chestnut galloper would finish second and 72 picked him for third. Only 46 failed to pick him somewhere in the past five positions.

Of the other outstanding contenders drawing first place selections, W. L. Bran's Challedon was selected to win on 97 ballots; H. M. Woolf's Technician was picked by 61; William Woodward's Johnstown by 34; W. E. Boeing's Porter's Mite by 14; Mrs. Bessie Franzheim's Xalapa Clown by seven, and Hugh Jackson's Ariel Toy and Joe W. Brown's T. M. Dorsett by five each.

The selectors were asked to mention their choices for the first five positions. In addition to 402 out of 448 "mentions" for El Chico, Challedon was picked 309 times, Technician 297, Johnstown 258 and Porter's Mite 234.

Hoya-Terp Game Heads D. C. Card Today

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, April 21.—Nobody is going to question Col. Lindbergh's eminent place in American life, but we've often wondered what the fellow might have become if he had been born with Babe Ruth's mob-love. Certainly, the presidency would have been a push-over for him, for no nation was ever more of a man's oyster than our's was for Lindbergh.

CONSIDINE

But a fellow has it, or he hasn't. He loves to be pushed around in the rough and sweaty embrace of his disciples, or he hates it. And mob-love can't be taught to a man. It has to be born in him, and he who tries to fit the robes of hearty brotherhood over flinching shoulders is immediately recognized as a phoney.

Lindbergh never kidded anybody. He was always a quiet youngster at Friends School in Washington, when his father was in Congress. Fliers who knew him when he was a barnstormer and a mail pilot liked him a lot, but he wasn't a fellow they asked to go along on the parties. He was quiet. A "loner." He never wanted to be anything else.

In Paris, after the flight, he made his one effort to satisfy the mad public desire for him. In his absurd mis-fitting clothes he waved from the balconies and saw nothing particularly frightening in the fact that his helmet had been snatched from him at Le Bourget and ripped to shreds, and that the gendarmes had to crack skulls to keep the people from doing the same to "The Spirit of St. Louis."

No Peace Again Anywhere

But Lindbergh was happy then. He had flown the ocean. He would collect the $25,000 prize money, which an intimate friend of his assures us, was his primary purpose in taking the risk.

But the fellow was never to know peace again, except perhaps when he and that incredibly wonderful wife were flying together over the great reaches of the earth. There were desperate efforts made to seize the privacy that could never be his. There was tragedy, too. And a brutal, mocking trial that eventually drove the man and his wife away from his land, sick and discouraged and bitter.

The years have only hardened the crust around him. He is "tight" as we say in sports. He, (or there is a faint chance it was one of his subordinates) refused for hours to permit photographers to take a picture of him at his desk yesterday at the War Department. Finally a request was made that one photographer be permitted to enter, but this, too, was refused. As a consequence the photographers hounded him throughout the day, swarming through the crowds around him, creating a disturbance and making things 50 times as uncomfortable for him as it would have been the other way. They got their pictures, as they were ordered. But they were pictures of a frightened, white-faced man, walking unhappily through a crowd on whose faces shone the love and interest and sympathy and respect they have for this man.

There is not much doubt that Lindbergh despises 99 per cent of all the reporters and photographers he ever came in contact with, and that he has fewer intimate friends than any public figure ever had. What would it have been like if he had been born with Ruth's bluster? With Ruth's big broad-nosed 'beam, and snuffle, and smile, and bass drum voice, and handshake, and autograph, and patience? What happier life might have been tossed his way if he could have shrugged and delivered himself into the sweaty embrace of his people as Ruth, honking like a contented buffalo, once did?

A Private-Public-Life

Like everybody else, we hope he's come back to stay. But we wish he'd stop fighting the public's inevitable curiosity, for it only arouses it a little more and makes it tougher to fight. Heaven knows the fellow has been sinned against, by press and public. A photographer once followed him for two weeks, assigned to get a candid camera picture of him picking his teeth. A flotilla of photographers followed his honeymoon launch. He has had to punch a couple of them and has taken the trouble to devise amazing ways of outwitting the others. But to submit, and get it over with quickly and painlessly, is not in the fellow's book. And apparently never will be. He believes he's entitled to a private life, and that all of that life—business, social, diplomatic, military and etc.—is private. A lot of athletes could tell him that some parts of it can't be private. They would tell him to "stop pressing." They would tell him it's easier to have 'em with you than against you.

Ruth hasn't a hundredth of Lindbergh's talent, but he would have known what to do about the people—the delirious fans, the boors, the bores, the clawyers, the drunks, the screwballs, the honest and crooked tradesmen and the whole long motley crew who changed "Lucky Lindy," from a slim, shyly smiling guy into a hardened and miserable misanthrope. Babe would have dunked himself like a fat doughnut into the coffee of pro bono publico, and emerged uneaten. Babe Ruth was figuratively mauled by millions of loving hands, but he was never known to miss his quart of beer before dinner. He took adulation in stride, for that was his unconscious nature. But adulation tripped Lindbergh and the woeful thing is that it always will.

Three Track Meets Also Scheduled

Maryland Lacrosse Team Plays Rutgers While Trackmen Meet William-Mary

By Jack Munhall.

With extension of this year's athletic supremacy over Maryland as its prime objective, Georgetown University's undefeated nine will expose a five-game winning streak to the Terps at 3 o'clock at the Hilltop in the feature of an attractive college sports program.

While the expected pitching duel between Georgetown's swashbuckling sophomore right-hander, brash Vinnie Powers, and Maryland's smooth-working junior, Lefty Earl Springer, will be the cynosure of most eyes, a top-notch lacrosse match and three track meets promise plenty of action.

At College Park the Terps' undefeated lacrosse and track squads meet stern opposition in Rutgers and William and Mary, respectively. An innovation will be introduced in the presentation of this bargain bill. The three jumping events of the meet—broad, high and pole—will be staged concurrently with the lacrosse game, starting at 2:30. Then at the completion of the stick engagement the remainder of the meet will be run off.

C. U. vs. Johns Hopkins

The other two cinder events bring together Catholic University and strong Johns Hopkins in Brookland Stadium at 2:30, and Gallaudet and American University in an intracity affair at Kendall Green at the same hour.

It will be a brilliant, unpredictable young band of opportunists against a potentially great but hard-luck team of veterans when Georgetown takes the field to try and duplicate this year's football and basketball victories over the Old Liners. With a complete sophomore infield and an outfield including a senior and two sophs, Georgetown has been inconsistent but nevertheless unbeatable.

They are a team blessed amply by the fickle Goddess of Fortune. Four times this season the Hoyas have popped up with last-ditch rallies to the eighth and ninth innings to salvage what seemed hopelessly-lost games. They did it against Vermont, and Yale, and Pittsburgh and Michigan, more recently. Only in their opener when they routed inexperienced American U., 13-4, did the Hoyas have an ample margin of victory.

Georgetown plans two changes in its line-up today. Johnny McGowan, sophomore infielder and outfielder who joined the team only this week after a siege of the flu which he contracted during basketball season, will replace the senior Joe Moran, in rightfield.

Moran, more naturally a second baseman, will resume his regular place at the keystone sack, benching Joe Dunn. Moran was shifted to right after Johnny Schmitt broke his leg.

New Bleacher Fans Found At Stadium

of battle dictated. The true Bleacher Fan is a fickle fellow.

Evidence of this was given as Vice President Garner, subbing for President Roosevelt, prepared to hurl out the first ball.

"Go on and pitch it out there, Mr. Roosevelt," voices of various B. F.'s rasped.

"That ain't the President, that's Jack Garner," others informed.

"Okay, okay, but tell him to throw that apple in and let's get this game going," the die hards came back.

Down on the field the waiting Nationals and Yankees echoed the same cynicism. They showed they did not think much of Mr. Garner's long wind-up, staged for benefit of photographers, by gently chiding him to "get it out here, Jack."

The Vice President finally heaved the ball and then sat down, seemingly very pleased with the scramble he caused among the players on the field, where a National known as Rene Monteagudo, one of the crop of Cubans, caught it.

Mr. Garner, in fact, seemed pleased with everything, for he laughed uproariously from time to time during the game. Whether he was mulling over his chances of taking over the National's No. 1 pitching spot come 1940 or merely enjoying the sight of the sun playing on the stars and stripes of the United States flag flying from its staff across the field was hard to tell.

The bleacher fans showed warm approval of Mr. Garner's toss by yelling, "Atta boy, Jack." Most of the veteran B. F.'s knew that the Vice President likes to wear white cotton socks and remove his shoes when his feet hurt him, a trait common to a majority of true bleacher fans.

In the second inning, when the Nationals scored three runs to take the lead, the Bleacher Fan was solidly with the home town boys. Playing in the bleacher stands' front yard, Leftfielder Estalella was the man of the hour as he fielded numerous difficult catches.

An abrupt change of heart was noted when the Nats went to bat in the fifth inning, still dizzy from the Yankees' five-run spree in the third inning. "Hero" Estalella went to bat to knock a sickly grounder down to first base for an easy out.

"Whatsa mattah with ya," demanded the Bleacher Fans, exhibiting their fickle temperament. "Ya must think ya playing mumbletypeg out there."

The Brighter Side . . .

—By Damon Runyon

We have often noticed that when those big old blunderbuss columnists go traveling around visiting different cities, they generally write nice things about those cities, especially if they are syndicated columnists and their columns appear in the public prints of those cities.

RUNYON

We said to ourself, now maybe that is the secret of those blunderbussers' success, so recently when we were ordered to do a little traveling, we figured it might be a good scheme for a small operator like us to copy that formula. Then right off the bat we ran into the editor of a paper in a Middle Western city, who said:

"Listen. If you are going to write about this city, don't give us any of that guff about it being beautiful. Our people will only think you were drunk when you visited here, or blind. We know it is not beautiful. We have a few nice buildings, but most of our architecture, especially residential, is a holdover from the '80's and looks terrible.

"Your location—" we began.

"Our location is awful," he said. "The locators of this city must have been a lot of nitwits. They could have picked any one of ten different locations within a radius of ten miles of this spot that would have been prettier, healthier and less hazardous."

Follow Old Cow Trails

"Your streets—" we said.

"Our streets in most cases follow the lines of the old cow trails or ancient foot paths and are therefore cock-eyed," he said. "The fellows who built the original city were too short-sighted or too lazy to straighten them out. The best you can say about our streets is that they are kept reasonably clean.

"But," he added, "the alleys are a mess. Our street cleaning department never sweeps under the bed, so to speak. However, it is handicapped by lack of funds like all our other civic departments. Maybe you better just say this is the average American city and let it go at that."

"Ah," we said, "but what is the average city?" we asked.

"Well," he said, "the average American city is one that has amazingly good schools considering that the teachers are over worked and underpaid. It is one in which the taxes are always too high, no matter how low they are, and in which the police department is too small, no matter how big it is.

It Has Some Sin

"It is a city that has some sin, but a lot more religion," he continued. "It is a city that has more home owners in hock to the Government and more residents on relief than it likes to think about. It is a city in which there is generally some municipal graft going on, inside or outside the law, but in which the public honestly transcends the dishonesty.

"It is a city in which the phonies run at a ratio of about one in ten of the population, and in which neighborliness kindness is a common trait. It is a city in which the businessmen ought to be awarded gold medals for their courage in battling on against adverse conditions and at the same time trying to improve their city.

"It is a city that tries to take care of it's poor in the best manner possible and that takes pride in the athletic achievements of its youth. It is a city that is glad to support a winning ball club but

Vermillion Is Star Of Opening Victory In Inter-High Play

Living up to every glowing report of its 1939 prospects, Roosevelt High opened hostilities in the West section of the interhigh baseball series yesterday with a 6-0 shutout of Woodrow Wilson. Eddie Vermillion, transfer from Tech, was the brightest star of the game at Western stadium, limiting the Presidents to six scattered safeties and fanning 12.

An uprising in the fifth, attended by almost every peculiarity of the high school brand of ball, took the game out of Wilson's reach, though Outfielder Danny Boothe had given Roosevelt a start in the preceding stanza with a legitimate homer into the centerfield stands.

Five runs came across for the Riders in the fifth, all of them earned, though errors and bases on balls were spaced between like weeds. The first man up went out with a weak single to the pitcher. The next, Ernie Vitale, took a pass and advanced ahead of Vermillion, who got to first on Columbus' error. A single by Waters and consecutive doubles by Hymie Perlo and Bill Robertson, scored four runs, and Jim Robertson singled to bring his brother home with the final run.

St. Albans Beats McKinley Netmen

St. Albans tennis team marked up a one-sided 8-1 victory over McKinley High yesterday on the Saints' courts as the only Tech triumph came in the doubles, Bell and Newell defeating Manger and Prichett in straight sets without dropping a game.

Buddy Edwards, runner-up for the junior D. C. crown, was defeated in the singles by Cowan, 6—1, 6—2, and he paired with Lawson to lose his doubles engagement, too, 1—6, 6—4 and 6—3, to Cooper and Chewning. Lee and Myers, of St. Albans, won the other doubles, 6—3, 3—6 and 4—6, and Saint netmen swept the other singles in straight sets.

Anacostians Defeat Tide In Opener, 4-2

Anacostia High, whose athletic representatives have turned in more upsets than a novice canoeist in their two years of interhigh participation, rang the bell again in the opening game of the East Interhigh Baseball League yesterday, handing Eastern's defending champions a convincing 4-2 victory.

From the throw-out of the first ball, accompanied with the usual ceremony, the clash at Eastern was a pitcher's duel, and Anacostia's Art Faircloth came out on the long end. "Puddin' " Lovett, hurling for the venquished Tide, allowed only four hits during his stretch, against seven for Faircloth, but the latter's fielding efforts gave Anacostia the final decision.

Both Faircloth and Lovett, however, threw the ball up there with the greatest success. So puzzling were the slants of both hurlers, in fact, that between them they struck out 28 men, Lovett 15 and Faircloth 13.

The first two innings were scoreless, as fielding and pitching were near-perfect, but then Anacostia got to Lovett in the third for the game-winning tallies. Burroughs, the first man up, walked, took second on Lovett's wild thrown to first, stole second, and romped over the plate when Lovett again threw wild to first attempting to catch Leukhart. The later went to first on a walk and Faircloth got the same treatment. After a double steal, advancing men to second and third, Bob (Flash) Gordon cleaned up things with a double over the leftfielder's head.

The other Indian tally came in the eighth, when Johnny Placos singled and after being sacrified to third came home on Lovett's third wild heave of the day.

Eastern's futile points were scored one each in the sixth and seventh. Reno, Tide firstsacker, got on base through Anderson's error, and a few minutes later came in on another Indian miscue, this time by Joe Soresi. The other run was the simplest scored all day, Les Cooksey pounding an inside-the-park home run into left field and scoring standing up.

It was Cooksey whose plate work furnished what spark there was to Eastern's attack. Besides his homer, he got a three base hit. Lovett hit a double, as did Gordon and Anderson for the winners.

winning that the victory was just another ball game. The opening game edge was off for both teams.

The Yankees gave Krakauskas quite a riding while he was warming up and the Yanks were lined up to receive Vice President Garner's pitch. But if you think they rode him then you should have seen that third inning.

Lou Gehrig didn't look so good on first base but he looked plenty good to the youngsters seeking autographs after the game. Lou sneaked out the back door and out to the parking lot where some 20 admirers caught him. Then he tried to get back and he ran into at least 20 more. Then he gave up.

Western Union Board Elected After Battle

Opposition Votes 181 Proxies Against Management

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 21.—Stockholders of Western Union Telegraph Co. today re-elected the board of directors proposed by the company's management. It was announced that proxies for 531,812 shares of stock were voted for management's nominees.

An opposition ticket submitted by Arthur C. Flatto, New York ribbon dealer who solicited proxies through a plea mailed to holders, got slightly more than 181,000 votes.

After the meeting Flatto, known as Western Union's severest critic, objected to acceptance of proxies gathered by the management. He charged "high pressure methods" had been used to gather the proxies, and that company officers and employes had engaged in gathering proxies on company time and with company funds.

Immediately after Flatto entered this objection, another stockholder jumped up and moved the meeting be adjourned. The motion for adjournment carried and the meeting closed.

After the meeting, R. B. White, president, said, "There had never been any doubt" in the management's mind but that its regular slate of directors would be elected.

Prior to today, this year's annual meeting called April 12, had been postponed three times to permit tabulation of Flatto's proxies. He originally claimed to hold approximately 25 per cent of the votes.

March Farm Cash 13 Per Cent Above February's Total

By the Associated Press.

The Agriculture Department estimated yesterday that American farmers received cash income, including Government benefit paymnts, of $582,000,000 in March—an increase of 13 per cent over February's estimated $486,000,000.

Normally the trend of farm income is downward from February through March. Heavy sales of livestock and livestock products largely accounted for the increase. Included in the March income was $95,000,000 in Government benefit payments.

Farm cash income for the first quarter of this year was estimated at $1,687,000,000 compared with $1,679,000,000 for the same period last year. Government payments of $192,000,000 were considerably larger than the $108,000,000 received in the first quarter of last year.

The department said the income in April was expected to be about the same as in March, instead of the usual seasonal decline.

Gold Continues To Pour Into U. S.

Foreign gold poured into the United States in huge volume for the third consecutive week which ended April 14. The previous week's total was $130,704,180.

Among the shipments were $23,550,786 from Belgium, $10,813,858 from The Netherlands, $19,293,088 from Switzerland, $72,075,484 from England and $4,494,130 from Argentina. Silver imports in the week totaled $1,682,841, including $404,697 from England and $739,006 from Mexico.

Prices Firm but Trading Is Stagnant Motor Shares Advance With Trade News Italian Bonds Strong, Germans Higher

New York, April 21.—Trading in shares approaching stagnation in a session of narrow price changes, most of them on the upside. Bonds improved a little and foreign exchanges held about steady. Wheat and May cotton eased but other cotton futures advanced. Dealings on the New York Stock Exchange of 392,760 shares represented the smallest volume for a five-hour session since June 17, 1938, when 327,840 shares changed hands. The number of issues traded, 601, was more than on Wednesday, though around the low levels of inactive periods for the last year.

Motor descriptions made the best showing, small buying being based on the unexpected announcement that assemblies had reached a new high for 1939 at 90,205 units. Ward's reported, however, that the rise did not reflect a general upward trend and that future course of production would be governed by the rate of incoming orders.

At the same time, trade sources said trend of sales of new and used cars is rather better than expected in view of the depressing effect on sentiment of events in Europe. Stocks, however, are thought to be a little on the large side in view of business uncertainties. Chrysler and General Motors were at the top of the list again, each advancing good sized fractions. The former is about 10 points up from its 1939 low, a recovery aided by new buying as well as by short covering.

Copper at 10 Cents

Coppers eased only moderately on announcement of another reduction in the domestic price to a new quotation of 10 cents, or 1¼ cents under the level which was maintained up to April 3. Kennecott and International Nickel, however, were steady in this group on a fair volume.

Some of the preferred issues benefited by scattered buying with the market as thin on the upside as they had been on the downside in previous sessions. On a 100-share purchase, American Locomotive was up 4½ and a number of other preferreds gained 2 to 3 points on a single transaction. On the other hand, Wheeling Steel prior preferred, sold off more than 10 points at 45⅞ on 100 shares.

Indications were that Wall Street attendance will be sparse today and brokers reported that a number of traders, including some of the professionals, were out of the market until something quite definite develops in the foreign or home situations or both to warrant taking a position. Most of the commission house observers were inclined to take an optimistic view of the latest events overseas. Signs of a quieting down were described in Premier Mussolini's reference to Italian preparations for a world exposition, in the British king's birthday congratulations to Chancellor Hitler and in London reports that the British ambassador soon would return to Berlin.

In the United States, Dun's reported retail trade affected by the indifferent to bad weather which has prevailed for about two-thirds of April. Signs of worry appeared in several sections of industry about the effects of coal shortage, and industrial as well as political leaders placed additional emphasis upon the need for getting the miners back at work to prevent stoppage of production and unemployment in dependent manufacturing lines.

Bond Market Improves

Listed bonds developed a little additional strength in another quiet session today. Foreign dollar issues did better than the domestic loans on the assumption that the sort of peace the world now has will continue. Small increases apeared in a long list of domestic bonds and both high grade and speculative obligations participated. Turnover was only $4,490,000, which is a starvation rate for bond brokers.

Italian 7s jumped 4 points and the municipal bonds of that country also improved. German issues were slightly better and bonds of the ring of countries around the Reich reflected buying. Belgian bonds especially were marked higher, and Scandinavians joined the movement. Australian and Canadian bonds showed fractional advances. In the Latin-American group Argentine and Colombian bonds showed best results.

Speculative railroad lines in the corporate department moved fractionally higher, with the interest-payers in better request than the default bonds. Medium-priced industrials also improved. Holding company and convertible obligations were barely changed. Local tractions were dull and irregular; communications issues drifted lower and amusement bonds advanced. Other special groups were irregular.

Long-term United States Treasury obligations were marked slightly higher and the gains sufficed for some fresh high records. Guaranteed bonds of the Farm and Home corporations were neglected. Best-grade utility, railroad and industrial bonds advanced by small fractions, where changed.

WPA Accounts 'Padded,' House Inquirers Report

By the Associated Press.

House investigators said yesterday they had reports that WPA project accounts showing the contributions made by local sponsors had been "padded" in many cases.

Members of the investigating committee asserted that apparently in numerous instances local communities had contributed practically nothing toward their work-relief projects, although WPA officials here have stated that about 17 per cent of the cost is born locally.

Under WPA rulings, members said, local communities are expected to furnish materials and equipment on all relief projects, and WPA pays for the labor.

"There is absolutely no uniformity about it, however," one legislator said. "Some communities have to pay their full share, while others get off for little or nothing."

Wheat Prices Dip as Foreign Demand Lags

But Market Is Dull With ⅜ Cent the Largest Decline

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 21.—European importers' activity in the international grain market abated to some extent today and there was a corresponding trading slump in the futures pit. Wheat prices dipped slightly but showed little change after a slow session.

Ability of foreign dealers to buy seven to ten million bushels of grain this week without stimulating demand for wheat futures puzzled many traders and the best explanation was the usual statement concerning existence of huge supplies in exporting countries.

The same answer was given to satisfy queries as to why the grain market failed to register nervousness over the European political situation, with reports of incidents in the Polish corridor and on the Slovak-Hungarian frontier. Traders said there is little or no speculative interest in the market. Thus, the bulk of dealings represents day-to-day commercial activity, which consists of lifting or placing hedges in connection with wheat and flour sales and changing of positions among various futures.

The slight decline here today was largely in sympathy with a ½ to ¾ cent lower close at Liverpool. Chicago prices ended unchanged to ⅜ lower compared with yesterday, May 69¼@69⅛, July 68@67⅞. Corn was ¼ off to ⅛ up, May ¼@⅜, July 50½; oats ⅛@¼ higher; rye unchanged to ⅛ off; lard 7 to 10 cents higher.

Three-Point Plan Offered to Spur Flow of Capital

Three ways of facilitating the flow of new capital to business were outlined last night by William A. Sleeper, engineer and economist of Ulen & Co., in a talk on corporate financing before the New York Chapter of the Society for the Advancement of Management at the Town Hall Club.

Mr. Sleeper declared that a shortening of the period between the date of nogotiation and the date of public offering of an issue would be a distinct aid to new financing. "This might be accomplished," he said, "in two ways: one by reducing the 20-day waiting period, and another by simplifying the requirements in respect to the material for registration statement and prospectus, which would lessen the amount of preparatory work and effect material savings."

As a second aid he suggested the consolidation of the registration statement and prospectus for such material as could be contained in the prospectus, supplemented by exhibits and schedules for additional material required in the registration statement.

A third obstacle could be removed, he added, if legal minds codified the "blue sky laws" regulated the sale of securities in the various States, with a view to making them uniform.

Argentina Signs Pact With Denmark

Buenos Aires, April 22.—Argentina has signed a commercial treaty with Denmark based on most-favored-nation clause. Reciprocal treatment is assured on all matters, including customs dues, accessory duties and clearance formalities. The raw materials of either country are exempt from duties and will benefit from any new advantages accorded to any other nation.

Argentina's known exports to Denmark in 1937 totaled 37,145,127 pesos. The provisional figure for 1938 was 15,141,816 pesos, and although this does not include items to order, there was a tendency toward a decrease in the trade.

Copper Cut Again; Now 10 Cents Per Pound

New York, April 21 (AP).—The domestic copper price was cut ¼ cent a pound again today, making the quotation 10 cents a pound. A leading custom smelter made the slash, as it did yesterday. The price now has come down 1¼ cents a pound since April 3, when the same smelter started on a series of cuts which other domestic copper interests matched. The present price compared with the 1938 low of 9 cents established last May 19, and prevailing until June 30. Today's price last was quoted in July, 1938.

Spot Cotton Declines But Futures Rise

May Deliveries Off 5 Points While July Advances 6 Points

New York, April 21 (AP).—Persistent bidding for the July delivery steadied cotton futures today. With the exception of May, which dropped 5 points, the balance of the list was 4 to 6 points higher.

Although liquidation and evening up in May continued at a good pace, straddle operations comprised the bulk of activity. A large spot interest bought between 15,000 and 20,000 bales of July against sales in Liverpool.

May rallied from a low of 8:12 despite fairly heavy pressure as offerings tapered off. With cotton men coming more and more to the view that release of Government loan stocks of the staple will be delayed for some time, the market appeared to be developing a more bullish view of nearby positions.

Worth Street reported a little more inquiry at price levels slightly below the market. Exports today 8,861 bales; season so far 3,084,435. Port receipts 7,489; port stocks 2,176,768.

Miss Seward Wins 2 Horse Show Titles

Competition For Schools Ends Today

Hunter and Open Championships Attract Outstanding Riders at Arlington

By Ann Hagner.

Sally Seward, hard-riding Arlington Hall student, came out on top in the student classes in the opening session of the nearby Virginia school's horse show yesterday.

The 17-year-old New Jersey girl annexed the advanced horsemanship class, in which 14 contestants cut complicated figures for more than an hour before a decision was reached by Capt. Sergai N. Kournakoff and Lieut. Gen. Frederich von Beotticher, who judged the horsemanship events on the card.

Sally also won the class for student jumpers, mounted on Arlington Hall's smooth-jumping Royal Barton, daughter of the famous racing sire, Sir Barton. Second was Betty Johnson, who was reserve champion of the school's last show, on High-Test, a big dark brown gelding.

The horsemanship classes were mainly notable for the fact that contestants exhibited who rode the two tremendously disputed styles of riding: the forward, or military, seat, and the Virginia hunting seat.

The forward seat advocates took in the major awards in the advanced class, when they annexed first, second, fourth and sixth ribbons, leaving the minor ribbons for the hunting seat addicts from Warrenton Country School.

The show winds up today with classes which point toward the hunter and open jumper championships, to be competed for by outstanding representatives from Washington, Virginia and Maryland stables. Featured is the $200 open jumping sweepstake, with nine horses already entered and many more expected before th e class is called.

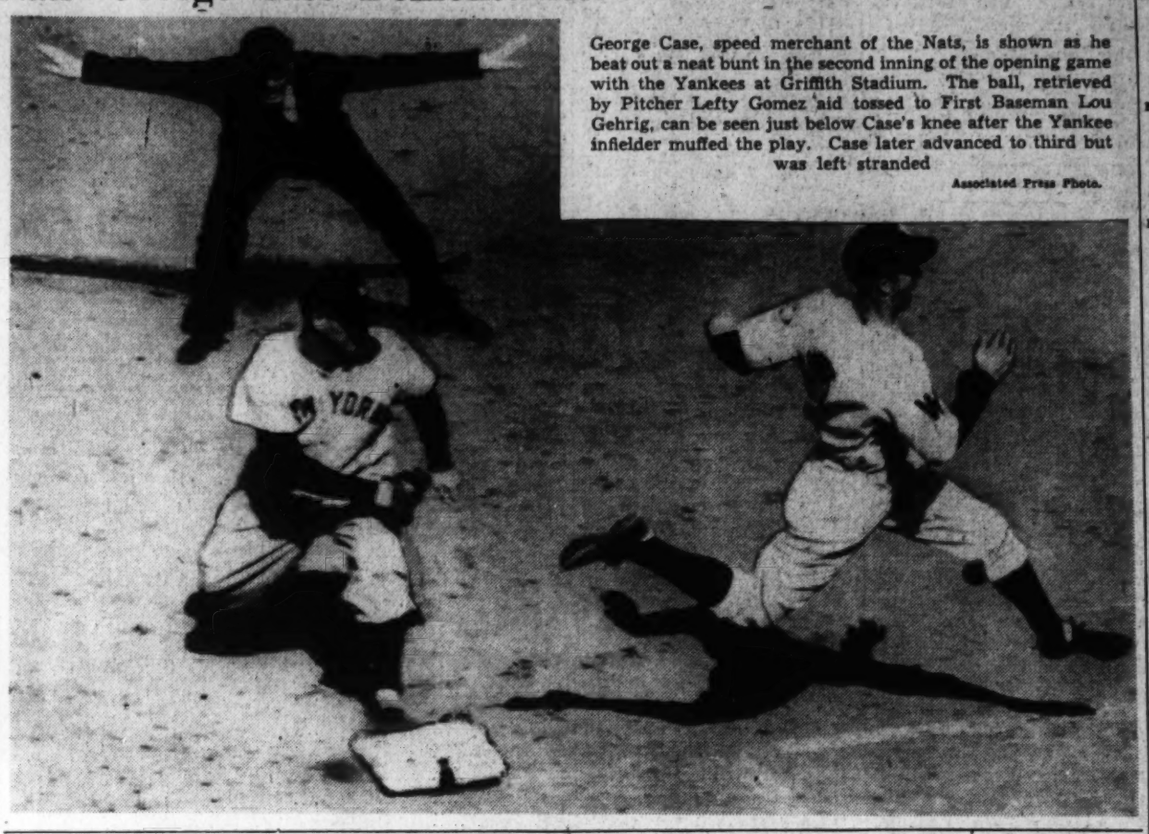
Nats' George Case Demonstrates How to Beat Out a Bunt



George Case, speed merchant of the Nats, is shown as he beat out a neat bunt in the second inning of the opening game with the Yankees at Griffith Stadium. The ball, retrieved by Pitcher Lefty Gomez and tossed to First Baseman Lou Gehrig, can be seen just below Case's knee after the Yankee infielder muffed the play. Case later advanced to third but was left stranded dislikes a loser, and that may kick about a lot of things, but seldom about funds spent on its public parks.

"It is a city that does not fully understand all the talk in the papers about communism and fascism, but wishes those warmongers in Europe would go lie down somewhere and die. It is a city that has its grouches and skinflints and its pollyannas and open-handed spenders and that has its knockers who say it is the worst city in the country. It also has its boosters who think it is the greatest city in the world and who would not want to be buried anywhere else.

"It is a city in which the mothers and fathers think the young generation is going to the bow-wows and the young generation thinks the mothers and fathers and the city, too, are old-fogy and outmoded. It is a city in which the people quarrel among themselves at times politically and socially, but who always stand shoulder to shoulder against outside interference.

"That is the average American city," he said. "Oh, yes," he added, "there's something else. It is a city that has the prettiest girls you ever laid eyes on."

Nats

with his shoulder blades rubbing against the bleacher wall, succeeded only in getting his fingertips on a handle hit by DiMaggio in short center.

Case Singles

The Nats appeared in a fair way toward getting that run back immediately when George Case led off with a clever bunt single down the first base line and Lou Gehrig followed by bungling Lewis' grounder. Case moving to third. But with none as yet out, the Nats came up with nothing. Bobby Estalella struck out in great confusion at one of Gomez's curves, and so did Taft Wright. The inning ended on a loud note of dismay as Lewis was caught stealing by Bill Dickey at the moment of Wright's strikeout.

But in the second inning the Nats didn't trifle. With one out, Charley Gelbert broke into the Washington line-up nicely by whacking a line-drive two-bagger against the left-field wall. And apparently it gave some other Nats ideas. Because Ossie Bluege promptly scored Gelbert with a single to the left, Rick Ferrell then scored Bluege promptly with a double to the leftfield wall and Krakauskas—himself, personally—slammed a single to center that scored Bluege with the third run of the inning.

At that point Gomez was perilously near the showers, with Manager Joe McCarthy having rushed Relief Pitcher Steve Sundra to the bullpen, but McCarthy decided to tolerate Gomez a bit longer.

He was rewarded. George Case hit into a force play. Buddy Lewis hit a harmless single, Bobby Estalella drew a walk that filled the bases, and then Gomez negotiated the final out of the inning by retiring Wright on a tame grounder to Crosetti.

The Trouble Starts

The Nats' 3-1 lead had hardly been posted on the scoreboard when the Yankees started to revise those figures. Frankie Crosetti took action by pounding a single to center, but the tension was eased when Rolfe flied to center. Then Jake Powell hit a double-play grounder to Myer, whose failure to convert it into a double play stirred up all of the Nats' trouble that was to follow. Fumbling the ball momentarily, he recovered in time to throw out Powell at first while Crosetti galloped to second.

Then the Yankees began to get downright vicious. Paying no mind to the fact that the count was two strikes and one ball against him, DiMaggio swung on one of Krakauskas' curve balls. It never reached the plate. What it did reach was the twelfth row of the left-centerfield bleachers against which Outfielders Bobby Estalella and George Case had raced despairingly. It was DiMag's first home run of the season and the score was tied at 3-3.

That blow apparently unsettled Krakauskas. Anyway, he walked the next two men, Lou Gehrig and Bill Dickey. He had two strikes on Joe Gallagher, too, when Gallagher proceeded to break up the ball game.

It Goes for a Homer

What Gallagher did was to slam a line drive into leftfield and start running. So did Leftfielder Bobby Estalella. But before Estalella could head off the ball it bounded against the leftfield boxes and then, to Estalella's surprise, it bounded through his bowlegs, rolling against the leftfield wall for an inside-the-park home run.

Gallagher crossed the plate at the end of a procession of three Yankee runs, headed by Gehrig and Dickey.

And there, folks, was the ball game.

Appleton wasted six innings of potent pitching for the Nats who couldn't stir up any kind of a rally against Gomez. The old right-hander was never in serious danger of permitting a run, and he walked only one batter.

But Gomez permitted only three hits after the Nats' second-inning outburst. The Nats had more than one man on base in the last seven sessions; in fact, Buddy Myer was the only Washington athlete to get a legitimate hit off Gomez after the second.

Myer stirred some hope in the third inning by lashing a single to right, but he was stranded like a leper. And in the fifth, when he singled to left with two out, Gilbert obligingly hit into a force play. There was a brief flurry in the seventh inning when Buddy Lewis beat out a bunt down the third base line with one out, but it subsided on the note of a double play into which Bobby Estalella obligingly grounded for Gomez.

Champ Cubs Open Season With Victory

Chicago, Outhit, Turns Back Cards, 4-2, Before 10,373

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, April 21.—With their hurling ace, Bill Lee, effective in the pinches, the Chicago Cubs got off to a good start in defense of their National League championship today, triumphing over the St. Louis Cardinals, 4 to 2.

Slamming out home runs into the centerfield pavilion, Joe Marty and Stanley Hack ably contributed to the Cubs' victory.

The game, which inaugurated the Cardinals' home season, was played before 10,373 paid spectators.

The Cardinals outhit the Cubs, 11 to 9, but with men on the paths Lee was stingy with safeties. Ten Redbirds were left stranded.

at his best and got around to throwing out the first ball.

That was a lot of sillyness, incidentally, since they didn't use that ball at all, on account a little guy named Tierra Del Fuego caught it and ran down a dugout with it and nobody could catch him.

Anyway, using several other balls, all of which were fouled over the grandstand to the caddies waiting below, the boys quickly got under way and—if the fellows in the press box are to be believed—the team with the gray uniforms seriously embarrassed the Washington pitcher whose name has all the "K's" in it. He left after the third inning which seemed quite unfair since he had put all the balls in places where the other team could hit them and who could ask for more? (Clark Griffith, for one. Editor's note).

Thereafter things were sort of stalemated except for the seventh inning when the Senators (the ones in uniform, not those in Garner's box) rallied into a double play amid what seemed to be an unreasonably large amount of noise from the fans.

The game ended promptly after the ninth inning, which didn't seem fair since our team was still behind. Someone should complain to baseball's national arbiter, Man Mountain Landis. It didn't seem right, I didn't think it was cricket. (It wasn't cricket. It was baseball.—Editor's note.)

Man of the Month

(Following each game by The Washington Club, Walter Johnson distributes among the Nats ten points of merit, based on their performances for the day. At the end of each month, the Washington player boasting the greatest number of points is designated as the Nats' "Man of the Month" and receives a trophy from The Washington Post.)

By Walter Johnson,
(WJSV-General Mills Broadcaster).

Pete Appleton was a hero in defeat for the Nats yesterday, and to him goes the bulk of yesterday's points in the Man of the Month contest.

To Appleton, five points, because he pitched scoreless ball in the last six innings after relieving Joe Krakauskas, and gave up only four hits to the Yankees.

To Buddy Myer, two points, because he attempted to start rallies with hits in the second and fifth innings after the Yankees took the lead.

To Charley Gelbert, one point, because his second-inning two-bagger paved the way for a Washington run, and because he played a sparkling game in the field.

To Buddy Lewis, one point, because he made two of the Nats' hits, a terriffic single in the second and a well placed bunt in the seventh.

To Rick Ferrell, one point, because his double drove in a run in the second inning and paved the way for another.

The Totals:

Jimmy DeShong	6	Charley Gilbert	1
Pete Appleton	5	Buddy Lewis	1
Buddy Myer	4	Rick Ferrell	1
Harry Kelley	2

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

From England cool canny A. E. Manning Foster voices a wish that lawmakers were not experts, saying:

"I do not believe the best legislators for bridge are necessarily the 'experts' or those skilled in draftsmanship. What is wanted is glorified common sense which can realize the mentality of the ordinary average person, enter into his difficulties and give him laws which are clear and concise. Avoid verbiage and redundancy.

"The 'official' mind dislikes brevity. It would rather use two or three words for one, and long words and technical terms for choice. You only have to read and try to understand any act of Parliament to realize this."

The present scoring rules proved harsh on our friend from Buffalo, W. Howard Woolworth, better known as Uncle Bing, for a mere 20 points gave him a bottom score.

A 900-point set he scored against his opponents' vainglorious bidding proved to be just 20 points short of the slam in diamonds that the other pair, playing his way of the board, bid on the hand.

Here is the way he described it:

"West opened the heart king; East overtook with the ace and returned a small club to West's queen. East was again put in the lead with a small diamond to the king and the return of a small club was won with West's king when South ducked. West returned a small club (on a two-for-one basis); forcing South into the lead. The declarer then cashed the two long clubs, yielding the remainder of the tricks for a score of minus 900.

"The bidding at the other table:

South	West	North	East
Pass	1 ♡	Pass	3 ◇
Pass	3 NT.	Pass	5 ♡
Pass	6 ♤	Pass	Pass
Pass

"Six diamonds is laydown, made by cashing high cards and yielding the club ace, score 920, winning the board. Six no trump and six hearts both wheel right in same procedure. O Sole Mio!"

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

At least two officials of the G. A. O., appearing before the Ellender committee, were drawn into admissions of having relatives on the Government pay roll. Somehow, this column had to yawn.

The principal persons who might have been called to testify in such a connection would have been members of Congress. And if their sisters and cousins and uncles and aunts aren't on the pay roll, the Congressmen have tried to put everyone else on and the difference between this practice and that of outright nepotism is a minor one in so far as the taxpaying public is concerned. There is no moral difference at all.

The oft-heard assertion that once a person becomes employed in the Federal Government he is there to stay, of course, in the realities, isn't true. This interesting and factual comment was made to the Ellender committee by Jacob Baker: "Those employes not under civil service (about 300,000) have absolutely no legal protection against unjustified dismissal, suspension or demotion in rank or salary, nor against unjustified failure to receive promotions, nor against obnoxious transfer. With respect to employes under civil service, there is one general statute, the Lloyd-La Follette act of 1912, which attempted to provide security of tenure . . . The safeguards of that act are operative only in cases of dismissal. The only action any employe has a legal right to receive is a copy of the reasons for reduction in rank or pay upon request. The Attorney General has said that this statute does not apply to employes whose appointment did not require competitive examination, so that all positions that have been covered in by non-competitive examination are probably not protected by the act.

"There have been a number of court cases brought by employes in attempts to obtain a review of dismissals, but aggrieved employes have never succeeded in enforcing even the legal rights plainly granted by the act."

Notes: The Treasury Department Recreation Association holds its spring dance in the main ballroom of the Wardman Park Hotel tonight . . . The gardens of Dumbarton Oaks, famous estate of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, 3101 R street northwest, will be opened to the public from 2 to 6 p. m. today. A small admission charge will go toward benefiting the Home for Incurables . . . Pennsylvania State Society officials write in that the dance this week at the Willard Hotel was an "overwhelming success." Among those attending were Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, vice president general of the D. A. R.; Ramsey Black, Third Assistant Postmaster General, along with nearly all of the Pennsylvania Congressional delegation.

The Office of Education, that took a national prize for its radio program, "Americans All, Immigrants All," will have the programs recorded for the use of schools and colleges, for any use that isn't commercial. . . . In all future cases, Federal employes who testify before the Ellender committee will do so on Government time, not their own. The orders for their appearance will come through department heads, making the sojourns at what the Senator calls his "little family affairs" official business. . . . Incidentally, before the General Accounting Office is through with Ellender, some 40 employes and officials will have appeared. . . . "A Cruise to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands," will be the subject of a lecture to be given by Merel S. Sager, head of the section of National Park System Planning, NPS, at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening in the Departmental Auditorium. Motion pictures and lantern slides, in natural color, will be used. The pictures were taken by Sager and Ed. Ballard, of the Interior Department, on the Government-sponsored cruise to Puerto Rico last summer and were shown to a large audience at the Willard Hotel last Tuesday evening. Sager is well-known to Washington audiences by his talks on the Hawaain Islands, China and Japan. There is no admission charge.

Bob Burns Says—

I overheard a silly argument the other day between two lifelong friends. One of them said that all Lincoln pennies had E Pluribus Unum on 'em, and the other fella said they didn't. Well, finally a penny was produced and the first fella proved to the other he was right. But the other fella wouldn't give in and he says, "Well, they might have that on them now, but they didn't use'ta."

I think my Uncle Fud was about the most bull-headed man in the world. Last summer he drove Grandpaw Snazzy out here to the Coast and when he got pret'near here he stopped a native at the fork of two roads and says, "This left road is the best road to Hollywood, ain't it?"

The native laughed and said, "No, sir, not that road. You take the road on the right."

Uncle Hod says, "Oh, you're crazy! I don't know why I asked you." Then he took the road on the left. Purty soon the road Uncle took came to a sudden end and the car shot over a cliff into the ocean.

When Uncle's head came out of the water he sputtered and says, "You know, Grandpaw, I believe that fella was right—we took the wrong road."

Her Majesty the Queen:

Elizabeth Wed to Duke in Historic Recesses of Westminster Abbey

Nuptial Pageantry Contrasted With Solemn Setting

By Lady Cynthia Asquith

Chapter XII

From Glamis the engaged pair visited Edinburgh to choose a design for their wedding cake—a wonderfully elaborate affair; four stories high, with all the coats of arms of both families wrought out in multi-colored sugar.

From the confectioners' factory the Duke and Lady Elizabeth went to watch the rugby match between England and Scotland, and their arrival on the football ground took the attention of the assembled thousands away from the game.

Except for a few short visits to Sandringham, Queen Elizabeth spent all the rest of the time between her engagement and her marriage in London. It was decided that the wedding was to take place in Westminster Abbey, where two royalties, Princess Mary and Princess Patricia of Connaught, had recently been married. Before the year 1922—when Princess Patricia was married to Commander Ramsay—there had not ben a single royal wedding in the Abbey since the thirteenth century.

The wedding dress, severely cut on medieval lines, was of ivory-colored chiffon moire, with pearl embroideries on cloth of silver; a narrow panel of this silver and embroidery falling between the shoulders at the back to gleam through the long bridal veil of exquisite old lace lent by Queen Mary.

Throngs at Wedding

The day of the wedding, April 26, dawned wet and dull, but in the course of the morning gleams of pale sunshine gradually filtered through the grayness.

Young and old had come forth in their thousands to share with ungrudging sympathy in the joy of another man and woman, a joy accessible to every human being, but for these two, whom chance had set on high, made memorably beautiful by the pomp and pageantry so dear to the English.

Elizabeth was a charming bride when she was married to the Duke of York. Here she is shown as she left Westminster Abbey

In Parliament Square flags were flying and green garlands swinging in the wind. Outside the Abbey the high wooden stands held thousands of spectators, and from every lamp post determined boys hung in grape-like clusters.

As the hour of the wedding approached and the bells clanged out their joyful peals, the calm majesty of the Abbey, where the dead still keep their state, was gradually invaded by a motley crowd of the living. Soldiers, statesmen, Indian princes, labor members, diplomats, a moving mass of color, they slowly filed in to be ushered to their seats by scarlet men-at-arms carrying pikes.

Dazzling Uniforms

From the great organ came the sounds of Purcell's beautiful suite, its strains slowly stealing upward to wander and stray among the echoes in the dim upper spaces, whose mystery was pierced by the long shafts of light; long shafts that scattered through the twilight of the arches the fragments of a broken rainbow and touched the gilded reredos of the altar, on which golden vessels glistened and candles palely flickered.

Even in this dim religious light the brilliancy of the massed uniforms was dazzling. The gorgeous clash of scarlet, silver, blue and gold, the shining swords and medals, the jeweled turbans; all these united to reduce the wedding garments of the women to insignificance.

The music ceased. Expectancy grew. In solemn splendor of crimson and gold the clergy thronged into the sanctuary.

The Archbishop of Canterbury with his glittering staff took up his stand before the altar. From far away came the sound of distant cheering; louder and louder, until it burst in a roar that echoed against the Abbey walls. The great assembly rose to receive the King and Queen, and the royal procession slowly moved up the aisle and took their seats in the chairs on the right of the altar.

Another great burst of cheering greeted the bridegroom. Between his two brothers, the then Prince of Wales and Prince Henry, he advanced up the aisle. Impulsively Queen Alexandra rose and embraced her three grandsons.

Put Wreath on Tomb

The bridegroom's ordeal of waiting is not long, for soon the loudest cheer of all is heard. The most poignant moment of every wedding has come. The bride is here.

Startlingly, piercingly sweet rise the choir boys' voices; "Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us," and through the wide-open doors to which all eyes are turned, she enters with her white following. It is as though those doors were letting in the spring.

Pausing by the tomb of the Unknown Warrior the bride stoops to lay on it her bouquet of white roses and white heather.

Her father takes her by the hand, and slowly they advance up the nave. Before them a golden cross is carried high. She reaches the steps, the bridegroom moves to her side, and they face the altar together, the sun shining full on their bowed heads as the familiar ritual is spoken.

The Archbishop of York addresses them in words of grave gentleness; the anthem, "Beloved, let us love one another" is sung, and then the bridal procession moves into King Edward the Confessor's Chapel to sign the register while the strains of "God Save the King" fill the Abbey.

Soon the bride and bridegroom reappear. Her veil is now thrown back, and from her face shines radiance and gentle resolution, as hand in hand with her husband, she walks out to face the cheering crowds and her future on the great stage of English history.
